J. Edwin Jay was the next speaker. He thought the time had come when we should realize our bearings. The influence of Christian Endeavor has covered the earth. It has been a great popular movement. It has had a great wave of enthusiasm. It is a child of the church, and cannot live on enthusiasm or popularity. There must be deep spirituality in this body, that the early converts may be properly nurtured. This can only come through prostration of our wills to God. Christian Endeavor has placed on every feature of modern worship a new effect, in the direction of liberalism. When this movement first rose it struck so great a need that in the anxiety for the young people some of the instruction which should have been given may have been neglected. The future generation of our church will have for its advisers those who have been schooled in the Endeavor. What, then, are the needs of this society? What shall we do that shall stimulate young and old? We have consecration meetings every month. Should we have something deeper? Two things are necessary for the church. We need to study doctrine as gleaned from the Word. Our land has produced abundantly. There is no famine for bread, but there is a famine of the fundamental truths of doctrine. Martyrs have suffered for some statement of the doctrines of Christianity. Loyalty to the flag comes not from lectures, but from sacrifice. Prostrate the members of the Christian Endeavor before the cross of Christ, and then we shall see loyalty. Testimony accompanies the knowledge and experience of doctrine. We need testimony embodying the daily life. There is a strong element of free thought, socialism and liberalism in the world.

He would ground Christian Endeavorers in the fundamental doctrines which would be followed by living testimonies. This is the ground for consecration. Let us realize that the blood of Christ flowed for us.

Prof. Williams sang "The Soldier of the Christ."

The consecration service was led by C. C. Haworth, of Lowell Academy. Let every Christian Endeavorer present lift their hearts in prayer at this hour. "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest to send forth laborers into His harvest." The word consecrate means make sacred. Everything in our lives should be made sacred. "If any man come to me and hate not his own life, he cannot be my disciple." This was Christ's idea of consecration. His love for souls was more passionate than that of a lover for his mistress.

Opportunity was then given for individual testimonies, which was embraced by a large number of those present.

The Executive Committee state they have paid $100 to the Alaska Mission and are out of debt. They have prepared a new constitution, which will appear in the printed minutes of the yearly meeting.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING.

Kansas Yearly Meeting was held this year at Wichita, Kansas. The Meeting for Discipline opened at 10 a.m. on Sixth-day, the 6th of Tenth month. Two sessions of the Meeting for Ministry and Oversight had been held the previous day. The meetings this year were held in the rooms of the Friends' University.

There was quite a good attendance at the opening session. The first business after prayer had been offered and the opening minute read, was the reading of the names of delegates. It was ruled that in case of any vacancies in the delegations they were to be filled from the alternates by taking the names of those present, first in order. By this method full delegations were found to be present from every quarterly meeting, except Mt. Ayr, from which no delegates were present.

The minutes of visiting Friends were then read, the following being present at this session: Joseph Stanley and Lydia G. Miles, from Indiana; Josiah Dillon, Joseph Sopher, E. Howard and Ruth P. Brown, and Enoch and Rebecca G. Lewis, from Iowa; Martilia N. Cox, from Western; Willis R. Hotchkiss and Arthur B. Chilson, from Ohio; and Joshua Baily, of Philadelphia.

The usual committees were appointed to have the oversight of the devotional meetings, to revise the standing committees, and a business committee. Three of the quarterly meetings had forwarded the names of those they wished appointed on the Nominating Committee. These were accepted by the Yearly Meeting this time, but as there was some objection to this course, the question was referred to the delegates to consider and make such recommendations as they thought best.

The delegates decided to give quarterly meetings, desiring to do so, the privilege of forwarding names for this committee.

The report of the Railroad Secretary, having been approved, the meeting adjourned.

Sixth-day, 2 p.m.—After the reading of five epistles and the appointment of a committee to prepare replies, the report of the trustees was read. This stated that the amended charter, as proposed last year, had been duly filed; that the trust funds under care of the yearly meeting were properly invested; that the use of the rooms the yearly meeting was now occupying, and with heat and light, had been secured at a cost of $150; that the trustees had secured the abatement of the tax against the dormitories connected with the Friends' University, and the taxes on the lots deeded to the University had been paid.

The report of the Printing Committee was accepted, and 2,500 copies of the minutes ordered printed this year.

A proposition from Grand River Quarterly Meeting, for the establishment of a new quarterly meeting, to be known as Shawnee, and to be composed of Shawnee and Iowa Monthly Meetings in the Indian Territory, was received, and the Nominating Committee was directed to propose names for a committee, which should have authority to set up such quarterly meeting if they deemed it right.

On request of Hesper Quarterly Meeting, it was decided to drop from the statistical blanks questions numbered 20, 21, 22 and 23. These refer to the number of families, parts of families, and the number having daily reading of the Scripture with devotion; the latter is now included in the second query. The numbers heretofore obtained in reply to these questions have been so inaccurate as to be misleading.

A minute of Wichita Monthly Meeting, forwarded by Rose Hill Quarterly Meeting, was referred to a committee. This minute asked for the repeal of the regulation adopted last year, requiring that all Friends employed as pastors must be endorsed by the Executive Committee of the Evangelistic Board.

On request of Sterling Quarterly Meeting, quarterly meetings were authorized to fill vacancies on the Evangelistic Board until the next meeting of the yearly meeting; also to declare the position vacant if the person holding it became incapacitated to serve.

Seventh-day, 10 a.m.—The delegates reported for clerks: Edmund Stanley, presiding; Francis A. Wright, recording; Martha M. Woodard, reading, and Mattie A. Pitts, announcing, who were unanimously accepted by the meeting. This makes the fourth year without change of any of the clerks.

The information from quarterly meetings was then read. Two monthly meetings were established in Oklahoma and one discontinued. Four new meetings for worship were established in the yearly meeting; none discontinued. The ministers recorded were Susan Berry Sisson, Edmund Stanley, A. Lindley Haworth and Mary A. Sibbett.

It was explained in answer to a question that the first-named had been formerly a minister, had joined another religious body, and on rejoining our society had to be again recorded.

The reports which are now made by the quarterly meetings in lieu of answering queries were then read. Some of these showed that the meetings realized that their religious state was much below what they desired, but most of them thought they had reason for much encouragement, and there seems to be much real spiritual life in all the meetings. Some noted lack of love on the part of a few of their members, but reported a loving disposition to guard the reputation of others throughout the main body of their membership. Mention was made that some meetings for worship had been omitted because of not having a pastor or on account of their absence, or having no minister. Most of the reports speak of the benefits derived from Bible schools and Christian Endeavor societies, and referred to the pastoral system as a necessity.

A general discussion on the state of Society followed. Joseph Sopher was the first speaker. He was sorry to see that so much dependence was now being placed on the ministry. Meetings should not depend on ministry, singing, or any set rule or fixed plan. We need order in our meetings, but don't need vocal service or a continuous jingle of sound. Let us not be afraid of silence, a silence covered, crowned and honored of the Spirit.

Mattie D. Chandler said we do want to listen to the voice of Christ.

Sarah Harris, and many other Friends, praised God that the reports showed that so many of our people live up to the requirements of the gospel, and the meeting sang "Praise God."

E. Howard Brown spoke of the neglect in regard to attendance of business meetings. People who love to come to meetings for worship, and let some one else attend to business, are like young folks who appear only at meal-times and furnish no help with the household affairs.

Wm. Perry Haworth emphasized the same thought. He also referred to the small attendance at meetings on Sabbath evenings—those who loved much would be faithful at all times.

Albert Benson said we needed the fathers and mothers of the church at these and all our services. We need to be awake and lively, and not make "sleepy prayers."

Abel Bond could not understand how parents could go to their meetings and enjoy them, and leave their children at work.

Verling K. Stanley felt much encouraged, and wanted all to look on the bright side.

Absalom Rosenberger advised us to get all the people at work.

Seventh-day, 2 p.m.—The term of office of five members of the Friends' University Board expired this year. The delegates proposed the names of the same Friends, and they were reappointed for three years.

The Committee on Education reported: There are six academies, the total enrollment at which last year was 530; present attendance, 331.

This was followed by the report of the Board of Directors of Friends' University. The net enrollment last year was: Males, 57; females, 45. Two of the professors have been given leave of absence—John W. Woody to travel in Europe, and Bevan Binford on account of poor health.

Henry C. Fellow, Ph.D., has been elected professor of philosophy and education; Lucy Francisco, A.M., of German, and Laura E. Kirby, A.M., of French, language and literature.

The enrollment this year is now 144. Since the close of the school year, two office rooms, part of the main corridor, and dressing rooms have been completed.

The treasurer's report showed general receipts, $1,535.21; expenditures, $1,507.42; balance, $27.79. Receipts from tuition, $1,854.67; distributed to faculty, $1,848.55; balance, $6.12. Amount due University on Yearly Meeting appropriation, 1898, $490.60; due from University to the president, $400.

Received on Endowment Fund: From children's fund, $141.71; from seventeen links, $41; from Hobson fund, $50; college association certificates, $1,366.75; Jones fund in hands of trustees, $1,000, making the total Endowment Fund, $2,599.44.

The board proposed to start a Twentieth Century Thank Offering, to be closed with the yearly meeting in 1901, of which the meeting approved. A subscription toward same was taken up. The amount of this subscription cannot be stated, as some of it was conditional on the sale of land, etc., and direction made that similar collections should be taken in all the meetings of the yearly meeting.

They also proposed some changes in the Articles of Incorporation of the yearly meeting and by-laws for their own government, which were referred to the delegates.

On Seventh-day evening there was a meeting of the Christian Endeavor Union, which will be reported in that department.

On First-day meetings were held in the main hall at 8 a.m., 10 a.m., 3 p.m. and 7.30 p.m., which were well attended. There were also meetings at 10 a.m. in one of the class rooms and in a tent on the grounds. The meeting at 3 p.m. was devoted entirely to "The Story of the Canteen," by Joshua L. Baily.

Second-day, 10 a.m.—Minutes were read for Gilbert Bowles, from Iowa, and John Riley, from Wilmington, ministers, and Mary A. Cox, sister of Martilia N. Cox, from Western Yearly Meeting.

The report of the Indian Committee was next presented. The missionaries present—about a dozen—were introduced to the meeting; also Hiram and Ellen Blackfish, Modoc Indians, and Jennie Meek, a Sac and Fox Indian, who was educated at Wabash, Ind. Many interesting details of the work was given, and accounts of the triumphant death of several Christian Indians. One said, "Jesus hold me." "He no let go." The latter repeated again and again with uplifted hand, until death took place. An offer of land for an industrial school among the Choctaws, near Antlers, Indian Territory, was referred to a committee.

The report of the Friends' Missionary Board was presented. It told that the new church at Douglas, Alaska, had been so far completed that it was now being occupied, although it still needs seating and heating apparatus. The receipts during the year ending Ninth month 1st, 1899, were $1,579.53, and expenditures on general account, $1,134.10; expended on new meeting house, $800, of which $638 was from the building fund which has been on hand for some years.

Richard Smith, known as Dick Smith, and his son Richard, Alaska Indians, had removed to Klukwan, where they are engaged in missionary work among another tribe, going in their own canoe and supporting themselves. Authority was given to the board to approve the acknowledgment of ministers, as Douglas Monthly Meeting is not attached to any quarterly meeting.

Willis R. Hotchkiss then presented the cause of "Friends' Africa Industrial Mission." The yearly meeting appointed a committee to take the matter under consideration.

Second-day, 2 p.m.—The report of the Home Mission Committee was presented. The character of their work is visiting the sick and feeding and clothing the needy. A mission school is conducted on the west side, close by the railroad yards, at Emporia, Kansas—average attendance, 77—and a request was made for aid in erecting a building for same. They now having the ground and $200 on hand. This was referred to the delegates.

The delegates reported in favor of taking up a free-will offering for this school, but being so late in the session it was deferred until next year.

The Evangelistic, Pastoral and Church Extension Board next submitted the reports of their Executive Committee, General Superintendent and Treasurer: $348.95 had been received by the treasurer, of which $321.25 had been expended. A subscription was entered into, amounting to $180.47. The statistical report showed: Revivals, 77; conversions, 355; renewals, 361; sanctified, 71; applications for membership, 133; pastors, 70, of whom 13 were supported, 47 partly supported, and 10 supported themselves.

The names of the new members of the board nominated by the quarterly meetings were read for approval, as well as those holding over another year. The board is composed of two persons from each quarterly meeting. The clerk was authorized to endorse a minute for Calvin C. and Mary M. Kesinger, who propose to visit Palestine, and in returning London Yearly Meeting. At a later session similar authority was given in regard to Cyrus C. Brown, who expects to visit in England.

On Second-day evening the usual missionary meeting was held. Gilbert Bowles made the principal address, taking as his theme, "The World Now Open to the Gospel." He described the different efforts to spread the gospel from the time of the apostles. The program was varied with singing and short addresses. One song, "Be a Golden Sunbeam," was rendered by several little girls. The audience was given an opportunity to express their sympathy with Mida Lawrence, who is now on her way to Douglas at her own expense, by a rising vote. Many were dissatisfied with this, and a spontaneous free-will offering was then made for her, amounting to $43. At the close of the meeting a collection of $100 was taken for the general work.

Third-day, 10 a.m.—The report of the treasurer was read and approved. Receipts during the year, $1,543.16; expended, $1,347.87; balance on hand, $764.07. Due from the quarterly meetings, $1,092.15, of which $559.28 was from Cottonwood Quarterly Meeting. Due by the yearly meeting, $1,399.90, of which $240 is due Associated Executive Committee on Indian Affairs. Balance of building fund on hand, $110. The yearly meeting directed that hereafter the treasurer should close his books on the first of Tenth month.

The delegates proposed no change in ratio of apportionment for assessment. On their recommendation, the following appropriations were made from the building fund: Glen Elder, $35; LaFayette, $50 (this meeting is in Cottonwood Quarterly Meeting; the name was directed changed, as there is a meeting of that name in Hesper Quarterly Meeting); Prairie Centre, $25, all being in Kansas.

The delegates also recommended the appointment of Cyrus R. Dixon, of Lawrence, Kansas, as statistical secretary, which was approved. They also recommended that the changes in charter and by-laws be adopted. The meeting decided to refer these to the trustees and University Board until next year.

Third-day, 2 p.m.—The committee in care of Bible Schools reported 78 Friends' schools, 56 Union schools, 3 mission schools. Enrollment, 6,259; average attendance, 4,366; collections, $1,286.69; paid to missions, $325.98.

The Committee on Nominations reported. Only one-third of each committee now changes in course each year, and almost all of these were reappointed. The Evangelistic, Pastoral and Church Extension Board reported the reappointment of Eliza H. Carey as superintendent, and the following Executive Committee, viz.: Eusebia S. Couch, president; Verling K. Stanley, vice-president; Henry H. Townsend, secretary, Hesper, Kansas; and Nathan W. Ridgway, treasurer, McLouth, Kansas. Money is to be sent to the secretary, as the treasurer is from home at present.

Fourth-day, 10 a.m.—The meeting appointed Henry C. Fellow and Hannah E. Sleeper to render assistance to the proposed "Friends' Africa Industrial Mission," but decided not to take part in the management of same. The yearly meeting also decided at a later session not to appoint members of the reorganized American Board of Foreign Missions, the meeting preferring to wait in both instances until the matter comes up next year in the proposed uniform discipline.

The report of the Committee on Temperance was approved. It stated 32 members had used intoxicants and 210 tobacco; 427 meetings had been held and 3,082 pages of tracts distributed. Quarterly meetings were directed to revise their representation on the Representative Meeting, and the Nominating Committee was directed to revise the yearly meeting's list of members. A testimonial of Argonia Monthly Meeting for Caleb Johnson was directed printed.

John D. and Margaret H. Miles were encouraged to accept in behalf of the meeting the proposed gift of land for an industrial school at Antlers, Indian Territory.

The Committee on Academy Titles reported two of our academies nearly ready to transfer title to the trustees of the yearly meeting. The Committee on Public Institutions reported some work done. They were directed to arrange for a proper representation of our meetings at the national conference on criminal and charitable institutions, at Topeka, Kansas, next spring.

Fourth-day, 2 p.m.—The Committee on Literature and Peace reported 90,000 pages of tracts distributed, and 20,000 more now in bundles for the quarterly meetings. They had published the "Readers' Guide," which gave the advantage of low postage, and was equivalent to the distribution of 300,000 pages. Total cost, $210.91; now owing, $49.94.

On report of committee on Wichita proposition, the regulation as to ministers being endorsed by the Executive Committee was allowed to stand, but the right of appeal to the full Evangelistic, Pastoral and Church Extension Board was granted parties feeling aggrieved.

Resolutions requesting the Senate of the United States to approve the action of the Peace Conference at The Hague in regard to arbitration were adopted, and directed sent to all Senators from States embraced in the territory of the yearly meeting.

A proposition from Cottonwood Quarterly Meeting, as to the platting of cemeteries and sale of lots, was referred to a committee to produce a well-matured plan next year.

One Friend was appointed in each quarterly meeting to solicit funds for an electric lighting plant for the University, to cost about $575. The general statistics showed 122 meetings, 11,064 members, 131 male and 33 female ministers; meetings without ministers, 21. Stella Quarterly Meeting reported 8 meetings, but noted 31 places where the gospel is preached. It was directed hereafter to have one question number of meetings, applying only to meetings held regularly each week, and another to meetings held at greater intervals. No report had been received from Grand River Quarterly Meeting, so last year's figures were used.

Fifth-day, 9 a.m.—A letter from John M. Weeks, in regard to some provision for aged ministers, was read, and the matter left to the serious consideration of Friends until next year.

The delegates made their final report, ordering $1,300 raised, and appropriations as follows: To pay part expenses of Committee on Proposed Quarterly Meeting, $20; Bible School Committee, $25; Board of Visiting Friends, $44.20; Executive Committee on Indian Affairs, $80; Evangelistic Superintendent, $300; Friends' University, $800. The yearly meeting ordered that the latter should be exclusive of taxes, which are to be paid by the trustees.

On recommendation of the Business Committee, the meeting endorsed the "Million Voters' League."

The report of the Biblical Institute, held at North Branch, Kansas, Eighth month 1st to 7th, was read, at which seven quarterly meetings were represented. Resolutions adopted by it, asking for the disuse of oaths and affirmations in the courts of Kansas, were not united with by the yearly meeting.

Sabbath schools were recommended to give one collection each month to the Alaska Mission, and the collection on Children's Day to the Children's Endowment Fund of the University.

A letter was read, notifying the meeting of the formation of the Educational Association of Friends in Nebraska, and they were encouraged to send reports to the yearly meeting.

Quarterly meetings were directed hereafter to base the number of their delegates on their membership as it appears in the printed minutes of the previous year.

The caretakers and the committee having the oversight of the devotional meetings and the preparation of epistles reported. The minutes prepared by the clerks, describing the exercises of the Meeting of Ministry and Oversight, and of the yearly meeting, were read. Then after a few loving words of farewell and thankfulness, the meeting adjourned, to meet next year at Lawrence, Kansas, if the Lord will.

News from the Field.

Our aged Friend, Lawrie Tatum, has felt compelled, on account of feeble and declining health, to turn over the agency for THE AMERICAN FRIEND to a younger man. He has for many years been a most loyal and practical supporter of the paper, and he writes now, "I highly value the paper." We are glad he has been favored to finish and to publish his account of Friends' work among the Indians, a good part in which he has taken. His book is published by John C. Winston & Co., under the title, "Our Red Brother." It will soon be reviewed.

The following lectures have been arranged for at Haverford College on the library lecture course for Biblical instruction:

Fifth-day, Tenth month 19th, 1899, Canon Rawnsley, of Kew-Wick, England, "How I Saw Pharaoh in the Flesh" (Illustrated).

Second-day, Tenth month 30th, 1899, Professor Richard G. Moulton, Ph.D., of the University of Chicago, "The Literary Study of the Bible as Distinct from Theology or Criticism."

Rufus M. Jones addressed a large company of Friends at Baltimore on the evening of the 18th, under the auspices of Friends' Association for Christian Work. It was the first meeting of the year.

In answer to the prayer, "Pray ye therefore, the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest," Wilbur A. Estes and Julia B. Estes, his wife, sailed on the Coptic, the 29th of Ninth month, for China. It will be of interest to the readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND to know of the last hours spent in San Francisco before sailing. The Friends' Christian Endeavor had a farewell meeting on the 28th. A good program was rendered, representing the different fields where Friends have established work. Several good songs were sung. One sung by Chinese girls—"This is why I Love My Saviour"—was very touching, and the meeting was closed by Christian Endeavor benediction, after which refreshments were served and Godspeed given to the missionaries. Charles H. Staller, having just arrived from San Diego, Cal., to see the missionaries sail, brought greetings. He said: "This hour comes in answer to prayer. It brings with it no sighs or tears. When the Master says go, we should rejoice. When He says stay, we should obey, and, under the leadership of the Holy Spirit, we are to receive commission and witness to a finished work. We are not to convince, convict or convert; we are to witness. The Holy Spirit will do the rest, and His work is best." Wilbur A. Estes spoke of his call to China, which was very interesting. He said God had given him the call and commission to go, and every one ought to be represented in the "go ye" by man or money.

Julia B. Estes said many expressed sympathy for them in their undertaking. She said: Others need sympathy more than we—those living in sin and those far away for whom Jesus died. The future is bright to-night; there is light all the way. I am not called to do great things. My life is made up of little things. I am delighted to go. God bless those who stay. Remember us when you pray."

The state room, No. 16, on the Coptic had been visited at an early hour. Voices of prayer and praise mingled together until the ship sailed. The room had been nicely decorated and sealed messages left to be opened on different days of the voyage across the deep. When the ship sailed not a tear was seen, and those on the landing sang, "God be with you till we meet again." May God hasten the day when more may go or send. May these two lives which are upon the altar of sacrifice to God and service for men inspire others to hear the "Go ye," and may they respond, "Here am I; send me."

OHIO YEARLY MEETING.

J. B. and E. J. Emery, of Ypsilanti Monthly Meeting of Friends, who have been laboring in the service of the Master in Brazil and Argentine Republic, are returning home on account of poor health. Their future address will be Manton, Wexford County, Michigan.

Peoria, Ohio.—We have been blessed with the privilege of having Charles D. W. Hiatt, of Fairmount, Ind., with us for a few days, conducting a tent meeting, which has proved to this place a great blessing. The gospel was preached with the power of the Spirit, and many were greatly blessed, some converted and some saw their privilege in the gospel as never before. While preaching one night the evangelist seemed impressed to say plainly to some one near him not to leave the tent until he was saved, for he might not have another chance, and one man who was there and well at the time, next morning fell dead, proving to the people that life is uncertain. A class was organized, and a meeting house is being built. We pray God to bless the good work.

PHILADELPHIA YEARLY MEETING.

The monthly meeting, which is held on Twelfth Street, below Market, Philadelphia, and which includes Haverford Meeting in its membership, has for several years past held an evening session for business during seven or eight months of the year, to secure the attendance and promote the interest of its young men. The first of these sessions for the current season was held on the evening of the 18th inst., and was attended by nearly sixty. A large proportion of these were between twenty-five and forty years of age, engaged in mercantile life and employed as officers and clerks of financial and other corporations. After the adoption of answers to three queries, to be forwarded to the quarterly meeting, attention was called to the admitted neglect of week-day meetings, both for worship and discipline, and the meeting was invited to consider the causes of this neglect and to seek a remedy. A short discussion sufficed to show that the subject was one of profound interest; that it touched the very essentials of spiritual life, individual and corporate, and that it required careful study and deliberate treatment. It was therefore remanded to the next monthly meeting, when it is hoped the causes of the delinquency may be honestly and prayerfully sought and ultimately dealt with in the fear of God.

Muncy Meeting is held in the village of Pennsdale, in Lycoming County, Pa., about 185 miles distant by rail from Philadelphia. It completes this year the first century of its existence. Its attendance on First-days, at this season of the year, is from forty to fifty-five persons. At times in the past it has been blessed with resident ministers of much power and religious influence in the community, but for many years past no recorded minister has resided in its neighborhood. Within the past three months, however, it has received an unusual succession of visits from ministering Friends from other parts, including Charles Rhoads, of Haddonfield, N. J.; Zebedee Haines and Cyrus Cooper, of West Grove, Pa.; John S. Kimber and Mary E. Kimber, of Newport, R. I.; Francis Smith, of Plymouth, England; Mary R. Haines and John B. Garrett, of Rosemont, Pa., and William C. Allen, of Moorestown, N. J. These visits have attracted some outside attendance, and it is hoped will bear fruits to our Heavenly Father's praise.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING.

Washington, Kansas.—Our academy has opened this fall with an attendance of sixty. A larger number than usual are taking the first year academic work. We regret very much that Friends' children do not make up a larger percentage of our attendance.

A. D. STANTON.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING.

Sara P. Morrison acceptably attended Friends' Meeting at Rayville in the love of the gospel on the 15th inst.

Spiceland Quarterly Meeting was held Ninth month 9th. The visiting ministers were Elwood Scott, Matilda Parker and Gretta Retz. The gospel was preached with power, and a large amount of business was transacted in love and harmony.

Knightstown, Ind.—Elwood Scott's health is much improved, so he attended meeting at Louisville, Henry Co., Ind., last Sabbath. He will go to Canada shortly for evangelistic labor this winter.

Alpheus Trueblood has been secured by Friends of Carthage for their pastor the coming year.

A. M. Kenworthy has so regained his strength that he thinks he will be able to do gospel work the coming winter.

Vanwert, Ohio.—Two Friends are wanted to engage in pastoral work in Vanwert Quarterly Meeting. We want them to locate near the meeting, and engage in work in two or three meetings. A reasonable support will be furnished. Write to F. C. Stanley, Vanwert, Ohio, superintendent of the Quarterly Meeting.

News and Events.

Events in the South African war are progressing with considerable rapidity. Two important engagements occurred last week between Boer and English forces, the most serious being that at Glencoe, just north of Ladysmith, in Natal, when the Boers were overwhelmingly defeated by the enemy. The Boers seem to have outnumbered the English, and, in addition, had the advantage of a position difficult to attack. They also caught the English unawares, and had they possessed the discipline and practice of the enemy, it could hardly have been possible for them, with all their indomitable courage, to have been defeated, and that so disastrously. The Boer forces were commanded by General Joubert. The casualties of the English amounted to about 200 killed and wounded. As an offset to the Glencoe defeat the Boers captured Vryburg, the capital of Bechuanaland, on the western border of the Transvaal, on the railway between Mafeking and Kimberley. This place was taken, it is reported, with little bloodshed. It is important in that it is the headquarters of the Bechuanaland border police.

The French Minister of the Colonies, M. Decrais, has lately received an official despatch announcing that Captain Voulet and Captain Chauvine, of the outlawed French expedition in the Soudan, whose members recently massacred most of the members of the expedition under Lieutenant Colonel Klobb, sent to arrest those officers on charges of cruelty and insubordination, have been shot by their own men. It appears from the despatches that the cold-blooded treason, which is the background to the tragedy, should be credited to Lieutenant Colonel Klobb alone, he being solely responsible for the massacre. His purpose, it is said, was to form a state independent of French control.

Philadelphia, perhaps, to a greater degree than any other city, is the victim of gross election frauds. The population of the city, while less cosmopolitan than that of New York, suffers from more inadequate registration laws. The returns are easily susceptible to "manipulation," and estimates have been made, which are very generally accepted as accurate, which show that the extent of frauds in Philadelphia varies from 30,000 to 80,000 voters

Quieting vs. Irritating Food Try Grape Nuts

"Chinese dogs are taught to subsist upon boiled rice with a little milk, and become so placid that they will not even bark," says Dr. Oswald.

This seems to demonstrate the fact that a largely vegetable diet inclines to quiet the nervous system, where, on the contrary, a diet composed largely of flesh is ultimately irritating, particularly to one confined mostly to mental work.

Grape-Nuts was placed on the market for the use of brain workers. It is a concentrated nourishing food, containing in its make-up minute particles of phosphate of potash obtained from the field grains. This, when combined as nature combines it in the human body with albumen, makes the gray matter of the brain and the nerve centers; therefore, the use of Grape-Nuts supplies the brain worker with steady renewal of the daily losses from his employment. Grape-Nuts do build brains, as can be demonstrated by ten days or two weeks' use. There comes a steady, sturdy feeling of independence and strength.

The question of properly selected food is the question of the day, and the individuals who give this question their care and attention, will become best fitted to make a success in life. Grocers sell Grape-Nuts food.

at each election. The padded assessors' list forms the basis of the structure of fraud, after which comes the polling of illegal votes, and then the work is completed by false counting on the part of the election officers. There has been a deep indifference to the evils of the system, but there are evidences that a general awakening is gradually going forward. An influential portion of the press of the city are taking an active interest in the crusade against corruption in political circles. Among other objects of attack is the Public Building Commission, which has rested upon the city like an incubus for so many years, and which has already expended over $20,000,000 of the city's money. It is difficult to reach, but it is earnestly to be hoped that its days will soon be numbered.

At a meeting of the Supreme Council of India, on the 20th, the fact was brought out that the present famine affected areas comprise 100,000 miles of British territory and 250,000 miles of territory of native states, each section containing upwards of 15,000,000 people. The situation in the central provinces was recognized as being distinctly grave. Very high prices have prevailed in many sections, but it is thought that the extreme limit has been reached and that food supplies from Mirma and Bengal will prove sufficient. A quarter of a million of people are receiving assistance.

An agreement has been reached between the United States and Canada regarding the Alaskan boundary line which is to be observed until a permanent adjustment of the dispute can be arrived at. The line decided upon was proposed by Secretary Hay, and appears to be entirely satisfactory to the interests of this country and Canada as well.

NOTES.—The Pullman and the Wagner Palace Car Companies have consolidated, the capital stock of the new company amounting, it is reported, to about $100,000,000.—Admiral Dewey has expressed himself as unwilling to be a Presidential candidate.—The third yacht race in the international series for the America cup was sailed by the Shamrock and Columbia on the 20th, the Columbia winning by six minutes and thirty-four seconds. This, which was the third victory for Columbia, gave the American yacht the honor of keeping the cup on this side of the Atlantic.—A disease which has broken out in South America, and which was declared to be bubonic plague, is spreading rapidly. There is, however, doubt as to the character of the disease.—An Anti-Imperialist Conference met in Chicago last week, attended by many prominent men throughout the country.—An epidemic in Japan has killed 12,000 persons.

WHAT COLONEL WARING'S BROOM DID.

It was Colonel Waring's broom that first let light into the slum, says Jacob A. Riis, in the October "Atlantic." That which had come to be considered an impossible task he did by the simple formula of "putting a man instead of a voter behind every broom." The words are his own. The man, from a political dummy who loathed his job and himself in it with cause, became a self-respecting citizen, and the streets that had been dirty were swept. The ash barrels which had befouled the sidewalks disappeared, almost without any one knowing it till they were gone. The trucks that obstructed the children's only playground, the street, went with the dirt despite the opposition of the truckman who had traded off his vote to Tammany in the past for stall room at the curbstone. They did not go without a struggle. When appeal to the aldermen proved useless, the truckman resorted to strategy. He took a wheel off, or kept a perishing nag, that could not walk, hitched to the truck over night to make it appear that it was there for business. But subterfuge availed as little as resistance. In the Mulberry Bend he made his last stand. The old houses had been torn down, leaving a three-acre lot full of dirt mounds and cellar holes. Into this the truckmen of the Sixth Ward hauled their carts and defied the street cleaners. They were no longer in their way, and they were on the Park Department's domain where no Colonel Waring was in control. But while their owners were triumphing, the children playing among the trucks set one of them rolling down into a cellar, and three or four of the little ones were crushed. That was the end. The trucks disappeared. Even Tammany has not ventured to put them back, so great was the relief of their going. They were not only a hindrance to the sweeper and the skulking places of all manner of mischief at night, but I have repeatedly seen the firemen baffled in their efforts to reach a burning house, where they stood four and six deep in the wide "slips" at the river.

Colonel Waring did more for the cause of labor than all the walking delegates of the town together, by investing a despised but highly important task with a dignity which won the hearty plaudits of a grateful city. When he uniformed his men and announced that he was going to parade with them so that we might all see what they were like, the town laughed and poked fun at the "white wings"; but no one went to see them who did not come away converted to an enthusiastic belief in the man and his work. Public sentiment, that had been half reluctantly suspending judgment, expecting to see the colonel every day "knuckle down to politics" like his predecessor, turned in an hour, and after that there was little trouble. The tenement-house children organized street-cleaning bands to help along the work, and Colonel Waring enlisted them as regular auxiliaries and made them useful.—Jacob A. Riis, in the October "Atlantic."

A cow in spectacles! This, you think, must, indeed, be a funny sight. Surely some one must have been playing a trick on that dignified animal, and you wonder that she did not resent the disrespect shown to her with a poke from her horns!

But the truth is this cow is very glad of the spectacles, for she is not an English cow, feeding in green, sunny meadows, among buttercups and daisies, but a native of the cold country of Russia.

Here the snow lies on the ground for more than half the year, and the cattle wandering over the great steppes have to crop their scanty meal from the small tufts of grass which here and there can be seen pushing above its snowy counterpane.

The rays of the sun on the snow make it shine with dazzling brilliance, which causes what is called "snow blindness" to unprotected eyes.

Arctic explorers and alpine climbers in early times used to suffer much from this complaint until it became the custom to wear smoked glasses.

The Russian cows endured much misery and pain from the same causes, until a man, whose heart was touched by the sight of their sufferings, hit upon the happy idea of inventing large spectacles, which could be securely fastened on to the cow's nose.

At the present time, in traveling across these wide snowy steppes, stretching for hundreds of miles, one may see thousands of these cows placidly and contentedly feeding, their eyes protected from the glaring whiteness of the snow by great smoked goggles. They look funny, certainly, but even cows are too sensible to object to a ridiculous appearance if it adds to their health and comfort!—"Sunday Reading."

THE MINISTER'S COFFEE.

Hurt Him Worse Than the Devil Did.

"I used the old-fashioned Coffee from my babyhood, and like many others, thought I could not live without it. Was in the army four years during the Rebellion and came out very much broken in health. I was compelled to quit the active work of the ministry for more than a year at a time, suffering terribly from stomach and intestinal troubles and torpid liver, with the consequent nervous headache and prostration, lumbago and rheumatism.

"Four years ago, being confined to bed with these troubles and ulceration of the liver, my physician positively forbade the use of coffee and brought me some Postum Cereal Food Coffee. Since that time, myself and family have used no other coffee. All my intestinal trouble has been greatly relieved, and I no longer suffer from rheumatism and very little from torpid liver or biliousness.

"I am fully convinced that coffee is very largely responsible for the greater part of all stomach, intestinal and liver troubles from which people suffer. I am now 58 years old, and my health has been so much improved that I do as much work as I ever did, and with about as much comfort. I can conscientiously attribute it chiefly to the use of Postum Cereal Food Coffee. There are several friends who have had valuable experience with the leaving off of coffee and the use of Postum Food Coffee. It gives me pleasure to add my testimony to help humanity to understand that the very general cause of sickness is, I consider, largely attributable to mistakes in the use of food and drink." Rev. J. A. Flickinger, Pastor of the Lutheran Church, Ray's Hill, Pa. Grocers sell Postum Coffee, and Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., make it at Battle Creek, Mich.

They are made of tough clear glass, clear as crystal.

They fit the lamps they are made for. Shape controls the draft. Draft contributes to proper combustion; that makes light; they improve the light of a lamp.

Our "Index" describes all lamps and their proper chimneys. With it you can always order the right size and shape of chimney for any lamp. We mail it FREE to any one who writes for it.

A BANKER'S GENEROSITY.

In a chapter of reminiscences, of Von Bunsen and his friends, in the October "Century," the Hon. John Bigelow tells this anecdote of Humboldt:

One day he was dining with Mendelssohn, the banker, and, an unusual thing for him, was very silent. His host, remarking it, observed to Humboldt that he was sure he must be ill.

"No," said Humboldt, "but I am in great trouble. Only ten minutes before leaving my apartment to come here I received from my landlord a note informing me that he had sold the house in which I reside and that I must move. The very thought drives me to despair. I really cannot bear to move again."

Mendelssohn gradually led Humboldt into conversation, during which he found time to write a note and receive an answer to it. He then took Humboldt aside, and said: 'By this note I learn that I am now the owner of the house in which you reside. The condition, however, upon which I have become its possessor is that you continue to occupy your apartment in it as long as you live.'

SINGER SEWING-MACHINES.

Every American warship carries a sewing-machine as a part of its regular equipment; besides this there are usually one or more sailors on each vessel who purchase hand machines and act as "ship's tailor," thereby earning a tidy sum by making or repairing clothing for their mates. Here, as in every other occupation using a sewing-machine, The Singer has the preference over all others because of its simplicity, its reliable construction, and its good work under all conditions. While powerful warships and great guns are good things for the Nation at some times, Singer Sewing-Machines are essential to its people all the time, whether afloat or ashore.

THE TEMPLE OF FAME.

"How far away is the Temple of Fame?"
Said a youth at the dawn of day;
And he toiled and dreamed of a deathless name;
But the hours went by and the evening came,
That left him feeble, and old, and lame,
To plod on his cheerless way.

For the path of Fame is a weary climb
Up a mountain, steep and high,
There are many who start in their youthful prime;
But in the battle with fate and time,
For one who reaches those heights sublime
Are thousands who fall and die.

The youth who had failed could never guess

The reason his quest was vain;
But he sought no other to help or bless;
He followed the glittering prize, Success,
Up the narrow pathway of Selfishness,
And this had been his bane.

"How far away is the Temple of Good?"
Said a youth at the dawn of day;
And he strove, in a spirit of brotherhood,
To help and succor, as best he could,
The poor and unfortunate multitude
To climb to the heights above;
On their hard and dreary way.

He likewise strove with adversity,
But his dream was ever of men made free,
Of better days in the time to be,
And self was buried in sympathy—
He followed the path of Love.

Proclaiming this truth, that the Temple of Fame
And Temple of Good are one.

For this is the lesson that history
Has taught since the world began;
That those whose memories never die,
That shine like stars in our human sky
And brighter grow as the years roll by
Are men who have lived for Man.

THE AMERICAN FRIEND

Free to First Month 1st, 1900

In order to introduce "THE AMERICAN FRIEND" into homes where the paper is not already taken we will send it to new subscribers from the date the subscription is received to the end of 1900, for only $1.50, the regular yearly subscription price.

"The American Friend" is the only weekly publication among Friends which represents the entire denomination from Atlantic to Pacific, and from Canada to Mexico. Through it alone can Friends keep themselves acquainted with the work of the denomination; to those who would keep abreast of the movements of the church it is absolutely indispensable.

It gives in its fifty-two issues each year a collection of articles from the best writers in our denomination, and many valuable papers from Christian thinkers of other branches of the Church. It treats in a broad and liberal spirit the great questions now before the Church, and it stands for every great moral reform which would make man freer and more permanently happy. It is not controversial, but illuminative and constructive. It is an exponent of applied Christianity. Christian Endeavorers cannot afford to miss its valuable department for this branch of the Church. Bible Classes will find much profit from its study of the International Lesson. It is also a newspaper, giving a general view of the home and foreign mission work, accounts of special meetings and the movement of workers, as well as full reports of all Yearly Meetings.

With the present offer to send the paper free to the end of this year, we should secure at least one thousand new subscriptions before the first of 1900. If every one of our present subscribers would get only one new subscriber in this way, we should have over 6500 more subscribers, and the influence of "The American Friend" would be doubled. Let all who see this notice call the attention of their friends to its importance. Let the subject be mentioned in meetings everywhere, and let an effort be made generally to extend the sphere of influence of "The American Friend." Sample copies will be sent to every one desiring them.

Remember: we will send "THE AMERICAN FRIEND" until First month 1st, 1901, for only $1.50.

AUTHORS AND CHILDREN.

Whittier, when driving to the station, frequently loaded his buggy with children, gave them a ride, and so missed his train. A joyous shout always welcomed his appearance. Shelley delighted to sail paper boats on the pond with the children. Grim, sour, dyspeptic Carlyle was an excellent customer of the candy woman, whose stand was close by his house. He always kept his pockets filled with her wares for the benefit of the poor urchins whom he met in his walks. Dr. Johnson, who was so gruff that people called him Ursa Major (the Great Bear), used to slip pennies into the hands of poor children asleep on the doorsteps, that they might be sure of a breakfast. Goldsmith, who knew him intimately, said: "No man alive has a more tender heart. He has nothing of the bear but his skin."

Harriet Martineau tells a pleasing incident of Wordsworth, who was rather unapproachable. She says: "In winter he was to be seen in his cloak, his Scotch bonnet and green goggles, attended, perhaps, by half a score of cottagers' children, the youngest pulling at his cloak or holding up his trousers, while he cut ash switches out of the hedge for them."

Crabbe on his fossilizing tours would allow no one to accompany him, unless, perhaps, some neighbor's child, who had pleaded hard to go. He never refused boy or girl; to them he was always the same gentle, obliging friend.

John Wilson, better known perhaps as Christopher North, was passionately fond of children, and in his later years made them his playmates. He took them on imaginary fishing excursions, where imaginary fish bit so fast and fun flew so riotously that the children were soon screaming with delight. So vividly was the scene presented that they never tired of it. During his last illness his young friends were always welcome. "Though now unable to do more than stroke their heads or touch their little hands, he loved to look upon them, smiling a gentle adieu when their prattle became too much for him."

The little incidents in men's lives often give a deeper insight into their true natures than can be gleaned from their books. The books show their intellectual side, when every thought is intent on its "dress parade," but it is from the man in undress, in his every-day contact with life, his family, his friends, that we can know him truest and best. So these men whom we honor and love because of their noble thoughts as given us in their books, can be honored and loved anew because they so nearly lived those divine words: "Suffer little children to come unto Me."—"Christian Endeavor World."

SHORT SERMONS.

The longest sermon on record is said to have been preached by Isaac Barrow, a Puritan preacher of the seventeenth century, who once delivered a sermon in Westminster Abbey that lasted three hours and a-half.

The shortest sermon ever preached was perhaps the sermon which Dr. Whewell was fond of repeating from the text: "Man is born unto trouble as the sparks fly upward." The sermon occupied barely a minute in delivery. The following is a verbatim report:

"I shall divide the discourse into three heads: 1. Man's ingress into the world. 2. His progress through the world. 3. His egress out of the world.

"Firstly, his ingress into this world is naked and bare; secondly, his progress through the world is trouble and care; thirdly, his egress out of the world is nobody knows where.

"To conclude: If we live well here we shall live well there; and I can tell you no more if I preach for a year."

Then he pronounced the benediction.

This sermon, however, is not as short as the famous charity sermon of Dean Swift. His text was: "He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the Lord; and that which he hath given will he pay him again."

His sermon was: "If you are satisfied with the security, down with the dust."

NOW READY.—The Second and Concluding Volume of President Sharpless's Notable Work.

A History of Quaker Government in Pennsylvania,

By ISAAC SHARPLESS, LL.D., President of Haverford College.

Volume II.—THE QUAKERS IN THE REVOLUTION.

The first part of this work, under the title of "A Quaker Experiment in Government," was published in the Spring of 1898, and met a warm reception from press and public, and a ready sale. It carried the narrative from the founding of the Commonwealth down to the year 1756, when the conflict between the peace principles of the Quakers and the warlike trend of events first reached a crisis. The present volume traces the same conflict through the stormy events of the Revolution, and examines its momentous results.

Two volumes, 12mo, with numerous portraits and other illustrations.

Cloth, extra, $3.00; Half Morocco, gilt top, $5.00. Volumes sold separately.

Volume I. A Quaker Experiment in Government, $1.50, $2.50
Volume II. The Quakers in the Revolution - 1.50, 2.50

A fresh and original contribution to political economy.—SYRACUSE HERALD.

Pauperizing the Rich,

By ALFRED J. FERRIS.

A "suggested solution of this modern problem of the Sphinx which confronts the twentieth century," as it is called in a long and appreciative review in the (London) Friend, reaching the conclusion that "whether we agree with the author or not, we do well to consider it carefully. . . . The leading ideas of this volume are worth thinking over."

PRESS NOTICES.

A wholesome critique on some conventional ideas both of charity and of justice.—Outlook (New York).

Symbols and Emblems—Illustrated,

By H. J. SMITH.

An indispensable book for all architects, designers and draughtsmen, and for workmen in the artistic, decorative and high-class building trades.

The author of this work, an eminent designer in stained glass, has been impressed with the fact that in art education of our day the subject of Symbolism seems to have been overlooked. "Very little direct instruction upon it seems to be given in the art schools, and graduates are left to learn at haphazard or to guess at the meaning of the symbols that are used so lavishly in our churches." The reason for this general neglect is to be found in the fact that the many works on the subject were written by and for the theologian and the archaeologist, and are too abstruse to be used as works of popular reference.

This is both a popular and a comprehensive manual of the subject. It is made as plain and concise as possible, and is thus enabled to illustrate and explain with all necessary fullness over three hundred and fifty symbols, including all the most familiar forms—a far greater number than is contained in any other work.

The illustrations are arranged in one hundred magnificent full-page quarto plates, each plate being accompanied by one or more pages of explanatory letter-press. Some idea of the plates can be gained from the reduced sample shown.

Royal quarto, printed on extra heavy deckled-edged paper, bound in illuminated art vellum,

$5.00.

NEITHER COLD NOR HOT.

THE charge against the Laodicean Christians nearly twenty centuries ago might very well have been written to describe the condition of multitudes of Christians to-day: "Thou art neither cold nor hot, but lukewarm." We are continually asking why the church is not more powerful—why it is not a mightier force in the world. The answer is here.

How much commerce and traffic would be done by our locomotives and steamships if they used lukewarm water in the boilers? There is no impelling force in half-warm water. The steam comes only when the water approaches or passes the boiling point, and with the steam comes the power.

Who would expect to light his house with electricity by an electric current which merely warmed the wire in the light-bulb? The light comes only when the wire glows with a white heat. What blacksmith would try to weld his iron bars by warming them in his furnace? No, he thrusts them into the glowing coals and then blows the flame to its intensest heat. Then, when the metal is soft from the white heat, he smites the two into one with his ponderous hammer.

It is just as impossible to get spiritual power, or to get spiritual work done, where the church members are only lukewarm. It will be found that the spiritual momentum of a church, the power it exerts in the community, the radius of its influence, depend very closely upon the intensity of devotion of its members; and by intensity of devotion we really mean positive, active faith. Men must CARE for a thing in this world to make it succeed, for nothing advances unless it is pushed by those who believe in it.

Imagine a great commercial house in New York managed by men who go to it only once a week; who stay in their business offices hardly more than an hour, and who never think of it again for a week. Everybody says that it is absurd. But is it not too nearly the way many churches are managed? The spiritual life gets just about up to the warm point on the first day of the week, and then slowly cools down to the zero point, until it is warmed up again. The mission of the Church cannot be accomplished by those who never get beyond the warm point and who do not even keep up to that! "I am come to cast fire on the earth," says the Master, "and what will I, if it be already kindled?"

We know, of course, the dangers of misdirected heat, misguided energy, zeal without knowledge, and we never want to see the head and the heart divorced. But we believe the great need to-day is an increase of spiritual temperature. We need to have the heart beat and throb with love and devotion, and we need the white heat of intense faith.

OUR SPIRITUAL HERITAGE.

EACH branch of the church stands for certain distinctive truths or principles, which it especially emphasizes, and it can exist, live and do its work in the world only as it realizes what its root, or seed, principles are and learns how to make them effective. In order to do this, it must know something of its own history; it must examine and learn to appreciate its spiritual heritage. It must know what its martyrs died for, and what its saints lived for. One of the serious features in our own branch of the church at the present time is the seeming lack of interest in our history. It is rarely that one finds a Friend who understands either the present or the past of his own denomination. To most the past is a dead past. It is a sealed book. Quakerism is for them like Melchisedec—it has no origin that is known.

The result is that many of us have very vague notions of what our message is, what our mission is, why we exist, or what we have to preserve. The part of the tree beneath the soil is no less important to the tree's life than the part above, and somewhat so the past history of a people—its acquired heritage should have a mighty influence upon its present life.

On the contrary, almost nothing—certainly nothing adequate—is done in America to preserve and transmit our spiritual heritage. Speaking in a general way, our children grow up and go out into life with absolutely no knowledge of our history as a people, and no clear conception of our mission in the world. Our new members come in from other denominations, or from none, and have only the dimmest idea of the body into which they come. They are not to blame for their ignorance, and they are not to blame that they have in many places quite changed the character of the meeting where they have come in large numbers. How much time has been spent, either before they came or after they were enrolled, in instructing them in the truth as we have been interpreting it for over two hundred years? This is no unimportant matter, but one on which our very existence as a branch of the church depends. Does any one suppose the Jews could have preserved an independent existence among all the peoples of the earth, moving like a gulf-stream which keeps its definite course in the midst of the waters of the ocean, had not every father felt that it was his sacred duty to make his son know and love the history of the "peculiar people," and believe in its mission and future glory? Never. This faithfulness in passing on the heritage is the sufficient explanation of the persistence of the Jews. Now, no religious people in the world, with an existence of two and a half centuries, has a more remarkable or a more instructive history than we have, or one more marked by divine favors. Our schools and colleges ought to interpret it to their pupils and students; our homes ought to make the children feel its worth and meaning, and our meetings ought to devise means and methods to instruct their members—not only in the history of the past, but in the mission of the present.

WAR'S CUP OF WOE.

THE following item, sent out by the Associated Press last week, helps us see, though we cannot feel, what must be the almost daily scenes in the towns and villages of the Transvaal, where nearly all the men are under arms:

A private message from Ladysmith to-day, says that a messenger, who had just arrived from Pretoria, says, the women there are weeping and wailing on the market place. Three trains have been despatched from Klerksdorp to fetch the wounded from Mafeking. It is estimated there are seven hundred killed and wounded, and it is stated at Pretoria that the British casualties are only eighteen.

The sight of men dying or lying wounded on the field never completes the picture of a battle. Most of the bullets which pierce a human body on the field pierce a human heart in some far-off home. The paper which tells us about this market place, with its crowd of weeping, wailing women, wives and mothers, who have lost their loved ones, also tells us about the "marvelous heroism" of the soldiers. It is this marvelous heroism of soldiers in the heat of battle which has for centuries so fascinated and dazzled the eyes of men that they have failed to notice the weeping of the women in the market place, refusing to be comforted, because the fatal bullet has not only killed men, but pierced and torn hearts. War on its own battle-fields is ghastly enough, but its cup of woe is not fully realized until we hear the bitter cry from the homes and the market places. And this is the way civilized men, after nineteen centuries of Christianity, decide which nation is right on an international question!

"Move upward, working out the beast,
And let the ape and tiger die."

EDITORIAL NOTES.

THE London "Times" recently contained the following report of a speech given in the House of Lords by Lord Selborne. It puts the ground of the war with the Boers just where it belongs, and where we have claimed all along that it belonged. It is "an irrepressible conflict" between two types of civilization and between two races of people. The real question at issue is who shall control South Africa, the Dutch or the Anglo-Saxon? This Lord Selborne distinctly states:

He did not believe that the Government of the South African Republic ever intended to give the franchise to the Uitlanders, ["Hear! hear!"] and the reason was this—that the leaders of the Transvaal and the Orange Free State had had an ideal before their minds—quite honorable in itself, and one which they were entitled to cherish if they chose, yet which had this unfortunate and deadly blot in its conception, that it was absolutely incompatible with the ideal of the British people. That ideal was that the future development of South Africa should be on Dutch and not on British lines—that if South Africa should be federated in the future, it should be outside and not within the orbit of the British Empire. ["Hear! hear!"] It was simply a conflict of the two ideals which were simply incompatible. That, he believed, was the real history of this crisis. It was not a war about the letter "s" or any small distinction between five and seven years' franchise. [Cheers.] It was a war brought about because two people, who ought to be kindred and who ought to be friends, had, unfortunately for themselves, cherished and aspired to two different ideals. Regretful, sad and distressed as they were that they should be brought into conflict with the Dutch in South Africa, yet, when they were confronted with this question as to whether the paramountcy, the predominance of British influence, was to be forever asserted in South Africa or not, there could be no hesitation or doubt as to the lines that the Government would pursue. [Cheers.]

WILLIAM JONES, whose portrait is given on our front page, was one of the most widely known Friends of the past half century. His mission field was as wide as the world, and his heart was in every work that made men better. We give this week an extended review of his "Quaker Campaigns."

GENERAL CHURCH NOTES.

Information has been received that on August 4th, the day when the last of the new treaties with foreign Powers came into effect, the Japanese Department of Instruction issued its order that no religious studies should be pursued in any of the schools recognized by the Government. Representatives of six Christian schools met in Tokyo a fortnight later, and resolved to give up the governmental recognition. Action to this effect has already been taken by the Presbyterian, Methodist and Congregational bodies, and by the Church Missionary Society (Church of England).

The fifty-third annual meeting of the American Missionary Association occurred week before last at Binghamton, N. Y. This association has twenty-six purely elementary schools that are chiefly in places uncared for by public schools, and in no way compete with the latter, and forty-five graded and normal schools. For the most part these schools are associated with rural churches, and seem to be doing an especially valuable service in the South, where they have been established in ten States. The association also has five higher institutions, including the well known Fisk University at Nashville.

On the 29th ult., from many pulpits throughout the country, sermons were delivered on the subject of Mormonism. The religion of Joseph Smith and Brigham Young is gaining ground in the United States, and that rapidly, if we are to judge by the reports, which are probably accurate, stating that 60,000 converts were made last year alone. Christians generally, however, are awakening to the growth of Mormonism, and organized efforts are being put forth to check its progress by educating the public to the real character of the religion. The missionary work of the League for Social Service along this line is probably the best of the kind. Specimen copies of its leaflets on Mormonism may be had by addressing the League for Social Service, 105 East Twenty-second Street, New York city.

It is said that a "Bible Trust" is one of the probabilities of the near future. The competition in selling Bibles has been so keen that a combination appears to be necessary so that prices will not be cut down beyond the point of a reasonable profit.

Professor Arthur C. McGiffert, of Union Seminary, New York, a minister in the Presbyterian Church, who has been charged with holding heretical views, has refused, for conscientious reasons, to withdraw from the ministry, as requested by the New York Presbytery. The case is now likely to go back to the General Assembly, and another heresy trial is probable.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

THE FRIENDS IN SPANISH AMERICA.

BY M. M. BINFORD.

It is now nearly twenty-five years since the first Friends meeting composed of Spanish speaking people was organized in Matamoras, Mexico. Samuel H. Purdie had spent nearly two years in preparing the way for this movement, and the writer of this article had the privilege of assisting in the organization, receiving the first members and preparing the discipline for the new church. A quarter of a century has witnessed a remarkable development of that work, making one of the most interesting chapters of Quaker history that has ever been written. The little church founded in 1875, in Matamoras, has grown to ten monthly meetings in Mexico, into which have been received more than one thousand members, while adherents have been counted by thousands. Schools and printing houses have been established, a Spanish-Christian literature created and hundreds of children trained under competent Christian instructors. Valuable properties are now owned by the various yearly meeting committees amounting to $20,000 gold in value, and other new buildings are soon to be erected. The migratory habits of the population in some places where our work is carried on has widely scattered our membership, and they are to be found to-day throughout southern Texas and Northern Mexico. Many of them have remained faithful to their profession of faith while others have fallen away. The native ministry, raised up in these Mexican meetings, includes some noble true men and women, whose work has been richly blessed among their fellow-countrymen. A yearly meeting has been established at Victoria, Mexico, having the powers of a quarterly meeting, and the reports of its deliberations are quite as weighty as those given of older and more widely known bodies of Friends.

Certain things have been indubitably proven by this experiment of a quarter of a century. I say experiment, because practically such a thing has never been known in our previous history as the establishment of a large and growing church under our name in a foreign land. We have proven the possibilities of our system in a new expansion of energy and by new methods of work. We have found an actual desire for truth as held by Friends. We have found a specially open door in this field in which so many American Friends have been interested. It is no depreciation of the work of Friends in other lands for us to say that, all things considered, this has been the most successful work of Friends in modern times—indeed, considering the number engaged in it, it might be safe to say, in any time.

Some of the openings in connection with the work have been remarkable. Many will remember the commencement of the work at Gomez Farias, in Southern Tamaulipas, when Samuel A. Purdie found the entire population of the village ready to renounce Romanism and accept Protestantism, owing to the influence of one of their priests, who had been able to see the errors of the Romish church. We have in that little Indian village, hidden away up in the mountains, a faithful company of believers to this day. But some of these open doors we have never been able to enter. An entire congregation in Zacatecas desired to unite with Friends and for a long while maintained a sort of Friendly organization, but we were unable to render them any assistance. Merida, Yucatan, begged us for a missionary for years, but we were unable to send any one and others finally entered the field. The "Olive Branch" and other publications of our mission presses, have gone into almost every part of Mexico and Central America, and have done great good in enlightening the people and opening the way for our own work and that of other Protestant denominations. Many of these publications have been sent to Cuba for several years and Samuel A. Purdie carried on a most interesting correspondence with parties in Cuba concerning the teachings of the Gospel.

Recent political changes in the West Indies, ending the rule of Spain in the Western Hemisphere, and laying upon the United States heavy responsibilities in Cuba and Porto Rico, have brought also new opportunities to us as a church. It was a most significant thing that the yearly meeting at Victoria, last July, should have received the following letter from Havana:

"To the Friends' Church in Mexico: Peace and greetings in the Lord Jesus:

Dear Brethren.—Upon organizing ourselves, it was intended by this church, founded in this city, independent of any religious denomination—the work being sustained by the individual effort of all the brethren which compose it—to establish a National Cuban Church, which, deriving inspiration from the doctrines and disciplines of the old Puritans, should worship the Lord in Spirit and in truth.

We have scrupulously observed this principle up to date. Baptism and the Lord's Supper have the Quaker form with us. The same is true as regards the government of the church and the Christian ministry. In view of these points of similarity between our church and yours, assembled in quarterly meeting, it was resolved to direct the following petition to the annual meeting of your church in that Republic.

First, The Evangelical Church in the city of Havana accepts and acknowledges the rule of faith, discipline and doctrines of the Friends' church.

Second, It desires to live by its own efforts, its members promising to defray the salaries of its pastors and the expenses arising from its missionary work. An executive body is already organized, consisting of Francisco G. Cala, an ordained minister, as presiding clerk, and Angel Serrato, as secretary.

Third, We desire that the Friends' Church in Mexico inform all its congregations of this decision, giving them fraternal salutations in our name.

Fourth, We desire that the Mexican Mission send us religious literature in Spanish, catechisms and texts for the Sunday School.

Fifth, We desire the prayers of the brethren in Mexico, both in their public meetings and in private, for the advancement of this work and the increase of our faith.

Finally, brethren, we pray that the Lord will bless and guide you to the end that his holy cause may prosper.

Your brethren in the faith,

F. CALA, Clerk.

A. SERRATO, Secretary.

Report of the missionary work of the Cuban Evangelical Church:

Pastor, Francisco G. Cala; ministers, Juan Francisco Galvez, Ana Suarez Rodriguez and Pedro Raices; established meetings, 2; membership, 86; Sabbath schools, 2; attendance, 260 to 300; day schools, 2, with about 300 pupils; one orphanage.

Now, this entire letter, with its statistical appendix, is one of the most remarkable documents ever addressed to a Friends' meeting. It is a marked event in the history of our development as a church, entirely unique in character. No one can foresee the results, but even an absolute withdrawal of the request would not render it less significant. One would like to know how George Fox would have hailed such a letter. It suddenly opens the door into a great city, with a prestige surpassed by none. There is a wholesome tone about it. These people do not come asking for money. They propose to support themselves and their own missionary enterprises. They only ask for fellowship, and we ought to give it in unlimited measure. We can aid in extending their missionary work, however, upon such a basis as may hereafter be agreed upon.

Along with this comes another very significant opening which cannot be regarded as less than a providential opening for Friends in prosecuting their work in Spanish-American countries. The Boston Fruit Company, now known as the United Fruit Company, that has known of the work of Friends in Jamaica, and greatly assisted us therein, has recently purchased a tract of 100,000 acres of land near Santiago, to be used as a great fruit-growing district in connection with their business, and now they write us to engage in missionary work in that district, giving us practically exclusive privileges and offering to assist us greatly in many ways.

In order to meet these new openings the American Friends' Board of Foreign Missions, originally created only as a bureau of information, has been asking consent of yearly meetings to undertake this work jointly in their name. We understand that Iowa, Western, Wilmington and Indiana Yearly Meetings have united in this movement, under the central board, and it is likely that one or two more yearly meetings will do so, and the work will be undertaken as soon as the machinery can be set in motion and the necessary workers secured.

So here begins a new chapter of missions in Spanish-speaking lands, and under a central board for the first time.

The new uniform discipline to be proposed for adoption at the next General Conference will doubtless contain a suitable clause formally authorizing the establishment of such a central board, and defining the mutual relations of the board and the yearly meetings, also its powers in the foreign field; but just now we are making history too fast to even wait for a General Conference.

The hand of Providence seems to point particularly to our work in these lands, for which we have been preparing ourselves by a quarter of a century's work in Mexico, and the realization of a vision of a Friends' Church in vigorous operation in another land, and using another tongue, seems not far distant.

THE SECRETS OF QUAKER INFLUENCE.

BY ELI F. RITTER.

[Eli F. Ritter, author of this address, is a prominent lawyer in Indianapolis, but not a Friend.—ED.]

George Fox was the bravest, freest, fairest, kindest of all teachers who had ever appeared among English people. His doctrines were radical in the highest degree, but they appealed to the reason and better natures of all men. He opposed nearly every theory and doctrine of religion that was then presented in those confused times, and also the existing theories of civil government. He opposed the papacy and the priesthood, and the observance of the sacraments and forms of worship, and financial support of the ministry, and the established church, and enforcement of religious belief by law, and formal worship, and titles, and salutations, dress and address. He sought to reform by tearing down and rebuilding. He opposed monarchy and the divine right of kings and heredity in rulership, primogeniture (that is, the right of the oldest son as the sole heir) either to the throne, rulership or property. He opposed war, slavery, oaths of office, or in judicial proceedings, capital punishment, imprisonment for debt, and every other thing in the church or state that seemed to him to be unfair and unkind to the individual. He made a great impression by the boldness, vigor, power and reasonableness of his course, and soon secured a following.

One thing peculiar in the work of George Fox was, that while his teachings were glad tidings to the obscure, they met with favor among persons of education and prominence. George Fox was the founder, in the proper and full sense of the term, of the Society of Friends, or Quakers. They adopted peculiar forms of dress and address and manners of worship, which made them conspicuous at all times. Because of the rapid growth and increase in influence of this religious denomination, and the doctrines which it taught, these people were hated, insulted, and many of them imprisoned, impoverished, their ears and tongues pierced, and many publicly put to death.

But whatever came to them, whatever doom faced them, whatever foe opposed them, these people followed the leadership of the spirit without flinching, and without counting the cost. The more they were punished, the more they were opposed, the more they grew in numbers.

William Penn sheathed his sword as a military officer, cast it away, abandoned his position in civil government and in social life, and put on the apparel of a man of peace, established and exemplified by his own life the teachings of this denomination, the history and influence of which I wish I had time to review; but I shall have only time for the briefest sketch on this occasion.

The Society of Friends, from the day when George Fox began to teach, has steadily borne testimony against the abuses and evils of the day in matters of civil government, in religion and in social life. This denomination has never floated with the tide on any subject of morality, religion or politics. I am not claiming as the truth of history that mistakes have not been made, that there have not been fanatics and foolish persons, and wild expressions, in the history of this Society. It has been human. It has had differences in its own ranks, divisions and sub-divisions. But however many may have been the divisions, in each there has been in a large degree the spirit of its founder and the adherence to the original principles.

The Society of Friends was the first organized body that approved and advocated the equality of all men in religious and civil affairs, and this has been well-nigh accomplished. It was the first to favor equality in men and women in religious services and rights, in matters of inheritance and the control of property and in education, and the equality in inheritance of sons and daughters, and these things have since become settled matters of law. It was the first to favor free schools and a free press, and these things the law has adopted. It was the first to favor freedom in marriage ceremonies, and this has been granted by law. They confined their labors to teaching and practicing what they taught in the humble walks of civil life.

They could not mingle with other denominations early in their history because their persons and doctrines were not respected. There was nothing personal before them to be desired but their peace of conscience and of mind. "When reviled they reviled not again." If at any time their worst enemy had fallen helpless into their hands he would have received mercy and kindness to their full. Individually they sought the communion of the inner light, and the guidance of the spirit in their worship and private life, and acted upon the golden rule in their dealings with men and with civil government. As a denomination they began as far back as 1770 to bear testimony against slavery in this country, and earlier in England.

In 1776 all the yearly meetings, north and south, bore testimony, against slavery, and continued to do so as long as that institution existed. In 1686 the Society published its first testimony against the manufacture and use of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes, and has continued to repeat that testimony. In 1778 the Society began its testimony in favor of a school system which should provide for education and the free education of the poor children. In 1799 the Westtown Boarding School was established in Philadelphia, which still exists, the advance step in a free school system.

The Society of Friends has ever believed in agitation, education and legislation. It has believed that the Bible was the best foundation for constitutional civil government. It opposed slavery and slavery is gone. It opposed imprisonment for debt, and that law has vanished. It opposed the combination of church and state, and that has been abandoned. It opposed the established state church and that condition has almost passed away. It favored the equality of persons and rights, and these have nearly been accomplished.

It favored free press, free thought, free discussion in all things, and this is now the order. It favored the equality of men and women, of sons and daughters, and this is now the law. In 1677 the Quakers established their first ideas of civil government in this country in west New Jersey.

The purposes of the Society in this country were expressed in a publication called, "Planter's Speech," endorsed by the Society generally, as follows:

"The motives of our retreating to these new habitations I apprehend to have been the desire of a peaceable life, where we might worship God and obey his law with freedom, according to the dictates of the divine principle. . . . Our business, therefore, in this new land is not so much to build houses and establish manufactories and promote trade and manufactures, that may enrich themselves (though all these things, in their due place, are not to be neglected), as to erect temples of holiness and righteousness, which God may delight in, to lay such lasting frames and foundations of temperance and virtue as may support the superstructure of our future happiness, both in this and the other world."

The Constitution for this government is a model of wisdom, and is about five years older than the constitution given by William Penn to Pennsylvania.

The Society of Friends was organized for two chief purposes—to reform men and to reform civil government. The Society entered into political affairs just as it did into educational affairs. It presented the Golden Rule as a standard in politics, the same as in free speech and free press. This Society thoroughly believed in the truth of what Lord Chatham afterwards declared in the English Parliament:

"Political wisdom is not sealed up in rolls and in parchments. It wells up in the forests like water from the hillsides. In this matter I distrust the refinements of learning limited to so few. A kind providence has not left us to so uncertain a guidance, but has given us the rule of common sense by which we cannot be mistaken."

Speaking of the Quakers, Oliver Cromwell said: "They are a people whom I cannot win with gifts, honors, offices or places." They were loyal to civil government when they favored what was right, as well as in their opposition to what they thought was wrong. We speak of courage, and are inclined to limit it to the battle field or brute force. Applying the term in its proper sense, no higher courage was ever exhibited than by the Quakers when they faced even death without hesitation for conscience' sake. William Penn said the government will be what the people are, and that the moral power of ideas will constantly effect changes and improvements in society.

In 1681 William Penn became the proprietor of Pennsylvania, and his messages to the people who already resided there, and to the Indians, are models of wisdom and justice until the present day.

William Penn was not an attorney. Before coming to this country he was arrested and imprisoned for having spoken in a Quaker meeting. When he was brought before the court for trial he refused to employ an attorney. He asked what law he had violated. He was answered, "The common law." He inquired, "Where is that law?" and the court was not able to point out the provision exactly applicable to his case. Penn said to the court: "The law that is not in being is far from being the common law." He defended himself before the court and jury. He presented the case with such force that though the jury was compelled to remain in a room for two days and two nights without food to force them to return a verdict of guilty, yet they returned a verdict of not guilty. That trial and that defense has been noted as marking an era in judicial history. It made an impression upon the law of England of great importance for good.

Admiral Penn, William Penn's father, had once disowned him in indignation, but on his death-bed the father said to him, "Son William, if you Friends keep to your plain way of living and preaching, you will make an end of the priests." William Penn was in the military service, belonged to a distinguished family of wealth, was in the line of promotion, but he became a convert to Quaker teaching. He sheathed the sword, left the military service, and became, perhaps, the highest exemplification of the Quaker doctrine and principles.

Penn's wisdom, or the wisdom of the Quaker society, which were substantially one and the same thing, shows perhaps to best advantage by contrasting it, in the constitution which he prepared for Pennsylvania, with the constitution prepared twelve years before by John Locke for Carolina. John Locke was in the prime of life, a man of high culture, had spent long years of careful study and research in the affairs of civil government, was selected because he was thought to possess the highest qualifications for preparing a civil constitution for a new government in this land. He gave to it his very best possible effort. He founded his constitution on property and power. Among other strange provisions in this constitution, it provided that leet men, or farmers, as we say, should be farmers forever; that there should be no change from one vocation to another. Locke's constitution was a total failure and existed but a few years, when it was abandoned.

William Penn called his constitution and civil government "a holy experiment." It went into effect in 1682, nearly one hundred years before the Declaration of Independence. There is more from the constitution of West New Jersey and Pennsylvania following the Quaker doctrines of civil government in the Declaration of Independence than from all other sources combined.

John Bright took these principles with him into the English Parliament, and made for them and himself a reputation and did a service of the greatest importance to the English people.

No denomination of people in the United States today, or in England, is more highly respected in civil or religious matters. President Grant was so impressed with the principles and work of this peculiar people that he was accused of having turned the government of the Indians over to the Quakers.

In 1770, following the teachings and guidance of the Spirit, three Friends filed an affidavit in the King's Bench in England, that Chas. Sommerset, a blockman, who was in chains on board a ship held as a slave, was unlawfully imprisoned, and based their claims upon the ground that slavery was against the law of God and inhuman. The King's Bench, after the most careful consideration, sustained their proposition, liberated that slave, and thereby abolished slavery in England. More than fifty years afterwards, in another case, the same high court in England, citing the Sommerset case, declared that the law of England was derived from the law of nature, and the law of nature from the law of God.

In the case of slavery to which I refer the teachings of the Quaker church were the means of securing a recognition by the highest court in England of their principles as fundamental law in a case of most extreme importance.

It has introduced and obtruded upon public thought more measures for the equality of individual rights, in civil law and government, that have passed into civil law and settled government than all the other churches perhaps put together.

Voltaire and Renal, though pronounced infidels, spoke in highest praise of the wisdom of the Quakers and their great service to mankind.

I desire to emphasize one most remarkable feature in the history of this denomination. In the day of its prime and of its greatest influence it had no representatives in civil government in this nation or in England, except William Penn in the founding and establishing the Pennsylvania colony, and in recent days John Bright in the English Parliament.

The Society of Friends, the Quaker Society, made its impression, gained its influence, accomplished its great work when its members could not be candidates for office, nor hold office, nor even become lawyers, because they would not take the oath of office. Its members were not in office, they were not in legislatures, they were not on the judicial bench, they were not on the stump in the canvass as public speakers for a political party. They were not in political conventions, they were not aspirants for any kind of preferment or prominent position.

It should be borne in mind that the best principle of civil government, and the methods of presenting the same, have seldom been presented or acted upon by persons in power until the common people have compelled such recognition and such action. The Quaker Society and Quaker people in the days when the best work was done were not shaping their positions or doctrines on the ground of policy, nor expecting that they would be made popular or accepted at once, but looked to the ultimate end. They neither proposed nor submitted to any compromise, modification or mere matter of expedience.

They have stood for the right as they saw it, with a faithfulness and sincerity that commanded respect.

THE SECRETS OF QUAKER INFLUENCE.

I have presented very briefly and in a fragmentary way the history of Quaker teaching and work, and have claimed for them phenomenal success and influence.

What were the secrets of this influence? It is said that a prominent man, who had narrated his conversion and experience in a religious meeting, when he was asked under whose preaching he was converted, answered, "I was not converted under any one's preaching; I was converted under my mother's practicing."

The Quaker taught the truth of God, and as it is now substantially accepted by the general Christian belief, followed the Spirit which lighteneth every man that cometh into the world, and they lived consistent lives.

The true Quaker was earnest, honest, faithful, following without hesitation what he thought divine guidance, loved his fellowman, ready to sacrifice, suffer and die for the good of others.

Bancroft, in his "History of the United States," says:

"Truth in its simplicity, radiating from the foot of the cross, has filled the world of sentimentalities with astonishment, overthrown their altars, discredited their oracles, infused itself into the souls of multitudes, invaded the courts, risen superior to armies, and led magistrates and priests, statesmen and generals, in its train as the trophies of its strength exerted in its wisdom."

This statement by Bancroft is justified and proven by the history of the Quaker Society and Quaker people.

Quakers taught that there is divine guidance for all men in all earthly affairs. They professed to be guided by its unerring light.

They taught the doctrine of peace on earth and good-will to men. They presented the golden rule as their standard of action. They practiced what they taught and lived up to their rule.

The real secrets of Quaker influence lie in the facts that they so taught and lived as to make men believe in the truth of their doctrines and the sincerity of their professions.

Blessed doctrines, blessed society, blessed lives, blessed influence.

I with uncovered head
Salute the sacred dead

Who went and who returned not. Say not so!
'Tis not the grapes of Caanan that repay,
But the high faith that failed not by the way:
Virtue treads paths that end not in the grave;
No bar of endless night exiles the brave.

* * * * *

Blow, trumpets, all your exultations blow!
For never shall their aureoled presence lack;
I see them muster in a gleaming row,
With ever youthful brows that nobler show:
We find in our dull road their shining track;

In every nobler mood

We feel the orient of their spirit glow,
Part of our life's unalterable good—
Of all our saintlier aspiration:
They come transfigured back,
Secure from change in their high-hearted ways,
Beautiful evermore, and with the rays
Of morn on their white Shields of Expectation!

BOOK NOTICES.

"Social Aspects of the Quaker Faith," by Edward Grubb, M.A. Headley Bros., London. 3s. 6d.

We have here a valuable book from a man with a message. He is not writing to kill time or to make another book, but because he has something to say, and something that the world needs. We have long felt that somebody should interpret the Quaker message in terms of modern life and modern thought, and should so help guide society and individuals toward the attainment of truer ideals of life. This is what Edward Grubb undertakes to do. He hopes to see the new come by a transformation, not a destruction of the old. He believes that society is to be re-made by the infusion of the spirit of Christianity into its institutions and laws, and by the construction of the Christian commonwealth, working from within out. The following quotation shows the author's practical views of brotherhood with individualism:

"The church begins with the individual. It is as we, one after another, are led, like George Fox, to see and know by personal experience that 'there is one, even Jesus Christ, who can speak to our condition,' and to yield our whole lives to His government—that the material is obtained out of which a Church can be constructed. Birthright membership cannot produce it, any more than creeds or sacraments. Correctness of morals, even, will not yield it, nor zeal for a certain society's methods and constitution; for both these qualities were possessed by the scribes and Pharisees 'My sheep hear My voice, and I know them, and they follow me.'

"But so long as the relation with Christ remains merely individual, there will be no church. Love of one another, brotherhood, mutual service, the sense of a common life and common aims—these are of its essence. And, indeed, it is chiefly to call forth the exercise of these qualities that the church exists. . . . There is, I believe, a special need that we of the Society of Friends should learn this lesson. Our training in individual responsibility is too apt to make us forget the common life. We fail too often in practical sympathy, practical knowledge one of another, the ability practically to bear one another's burdens. We tend too much to keep ourselves to ourselves and to wish others would do the same. The individualism of our creed, and the individualism of business act and react upon one another. We take it as an axiom in great towns that we must live at such distances from one another that, except in our own selected circle, it is almost impossible to meet in one another's homes. How can we live as brothers when we barely know each other's names?"

"Quaker Campaigns in Peace and War." By William Jones. Headley Bros., London, 1899. Friends' Book and Tract Com., New York city.

This stout volume of 406 pages can be placed alongside of the "Memoir of John Roberts." It is one of the most entertaining Quaker books that has been written. It is full of accounts of unusual experiences, hairbreadth escapes, interviews with great personages, adventures by sea and land, and personal reminiscences of great variety. Its lamented author died a few weeks after its publication, and to those who knew him the book will come with added interest.

Many readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, who have heard William Jones speak on the subject in which he was so much interested—Peace and Arbitration—will turn, with some curiosity, to see how the accounts in the book compare with the spoken words of the eloquent lecturer. It must be confessed that the charm of voice and manner added much. Still there can be few pages which convey a more graphic picture of the horrors of war than those which describe the author's experience as agent of the Friends' "War Victims' Fund" during and after the Franco-Prussian War, 1870-71.

There are matters of history mentioned about which there may be some differences of opinion, but in relation to the facts of which William Jones was eye-witness there can be no question as to their truthfulness. He gives an awful picture of the devastations of war. Again, in Bulgaria, he tells of the atrocities of the unspeakable Turk in language that is forcible.

He relates many interesting anecdotes of distinguished men and women—Edward Pease, the father of English railroads; William Edward Forster, Cardinal Antonelli, Grover Cleveland, John Bright, Li Hung Chang, Sir George Gray, John Greenleaf Whittier, and others. The writer heard him relate an anecdote of John Bright which does not appear in this volume. He said that one day, while he was a boy at Ackworth School, John Bright was a visitor, and came to hear the class of which William Jones was a member. Some of the boys read indistinctly, whereupon John Bright said: "When I was at Ackworth and in a reading class like yours, we too had a visitor. I was told to read and read poorly. The visitor then called out, 'Open your jaws, boy, open your jaws; if you want to read well, open your jaws!'" John Bright added, "One reason of my success as a speaker is that I learned then to open my jaws." William Jones said, "I never forgot that lesson."

William Jones was a Welshman, and he tells us that when at the age of nine he was sent to Ackworth School and could hardly speak a word of English. His account of his school days is graphic. No vacations were allowed until after three years' stay at the school, and the discipline and life seem almost cruel.

The somewhat rambling narrative cannot be indicated in detail, but when it is stated that he visited, besides the continent of Europe, India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand and America, the variety of incidents and interest can be imagined.

The book "does not purport to be a complete autobiography," which may account somewhat for its lack of proportion. Through the whole narrative, which appears to have been written chiefly for the purpose of entertainment, there is evident a very strong attachment to the Society of Friends, an intelligent acceptance of its doctrines, and a simple faith in Christ.

There are several interesting illustrations, and an admirable portrait.

SOME ITEMS AS TO THE TRANSVAAL WAR.

BY NEWTON A. TRUEBLOOD.

Originally the Dutch from Holland, about 1652, settled at Cape Colony, and for 150 years a tide of emigration settled rapidly, moving northward and eastward, and these, together with the natives, who were very numerous, soon made a dense population. But the British government took possession of it in 1806, and soon found themselves at war with the Kafirs, mainly of Arab descent, and of a warlike disposition. These wars lasted from 1812 to 1850, at intervals, but the British held their own and also drove the "Boers"—a Dutch word meaning "peasant"—over into what is now called "The Orange Free State," about the year 1836.

Following this the Boers settled in large numbers farther north, in what is now called the South African Republic. These Transvaal people made a treaty with Great Britain, called "The Land River Convention," in which the absolute independence of the Boers was recognized by the British. This took place in 1852, long before gold was discovered in that section. In 1854 "The Orange Free State" was made a Republic.

In 1870 diamonds were discovered in territory that the English and the Orange Free State both claimed. In 1871 the British Government annexed the diamond fields, in spite of the protests of the Free State Government. In 1877 Great Britain broke the "Land River Convention," and annexed the Transvaal, and in 1880-81 the Boers revolted and organized a Republic, and a war followed in which the British were defeated, one of the battles being at Majuba Hill. In 1884 the Convention of London granted the Transvaal Republic entire freedom, without suzerainty, and it became "a foreign state." In 1886 gold was discovered in the Transvaal territories and a great excitement followed, the greed for gold causing many thousands, chiefly English, to rush for Johannesburg, and that town soon became a city of over one hundred thousand in population.

The total output of gold from that section, in 1887, was 43,155 ounces. This rapidly increased each year, and, in 1891, the production of gold was 381,557 ounces; in 1897, the output reached 2,511,000 ounces, and to-day it is decidedly the richest gold field in the world.

In 1894, the British South Africa Company, managed by Cecil Rhodes, made an attempt to overthrow the Republic, and his system of extending British conquests has made him very hateful to the Boers. In 1895 and 1896 the Jameson raid took place, and more bitter feeling was engendered between the British and the Boers. In 1898, differences arose between Joseph Chamberlain, Colonial Secretary of the British Ministry, and Paul Kruger, the President of the South African Republic.

The Boers asked, through Kruger, that all differences between the two governments be submitted to impartial arbitration, and Mr. Chamberlain refused this, and the hitch in the negotiations has been partly the suzerainty, partly the franchise demanded by the English for all "Outlanders," and the British refusal to arbitrate.

In August last the Boers sent proposals to Great Britain to make the residence for enfranchisement five years, provided that the English would promise not to interfere again in the internal affairs of the Republic. Mr. Chamberlain rejected these proposals and made larger demands than ever, which the Transvaal could not accept. The Orange Free State joined the South African Republic (the Transvaal) in their position, and war of the most horrible kind has ensued.

The sympathies of the masses of the people in the United States are generally with the Boers, simply because England had no right to interfere with the Republic as to their laws in regard to the franchise, and it has been stated that the British Government demanded that the English language be taught in the schools of the Transvaal. If Germany was to order the United States to pass certain laws concerning Germans voting, and as to teaching that language in our public schools, it is likely that our Government would send her word, "Our States can attend to our own internal affairs." The Boers, however, did wrong in crossing into British territory, in Natal, and attacking the English armies there; they also made a bad mistake in crossing over their lines and attacking the English railroads and telegraph lines at Mafeking, Vryburg and other railroad towns outside their own borders.

The great blame of this war must rest on the shoulders of Joseph Chamberlain, the Colonial Secretary of Great Britain, for refusing to arbitrate matters as to the internal affairs of the Transvaal. It is a sad thought that the great Peace Conference in The Hague has resulted in ashes, and that, too, by the nation which took a leading part, through one of its delegates, in framing the plan for an international court.

Now as to some geographical items about these two African Republics.

The South African Republic consists of high tablelands, hilly and mountainous, on which grass grows abundantly, and the Boers, being farmers, raise large herds of cattle and sheep, and are a strong, active, sturdy set of men, and brave as to their warlike natures.

The soil in many places is reddish in color, and large and valuable mines of minerals, as gold, copper, coal and iron, are found, making the country valuable. There are three great lines of railroad—one commencing at Cape Town, the capital of Cape Colony, and running northward, bearing to the east, along the western border of the South African Republic, about 900 miles in length; another commences at Port Elizabeth, running north through the Orange Free State, and, entering the Transvaal, runs through Johannesburg, Pretoria, and then eastward to Delagoa Bay; another commences at Durban, running north through Natal and through the towns near which the two late battles have been fought.

Neither of these two Republics has any seaports. Great Britain owns all the land south, west and north of them, and Portugal owns a part of the eastern border of the South African Republic. They have no chance to get to the Indian Ocean unless across lands belonging to other nations. As a kind of rough outline to those readers who have no late atlas, suppose we take the three States of Ohio, Indiana and Illinois and call that section the South African Republic—a little larger, however, as to number of square miles. Then take Kentucky and call that the Orange Free State, and its size and location would be similar in many respects. Thus one can form some idea of these two small Republics as regards South Africa and these four States relative to the United States.

The blacks all through South Africa are far more numerous than the white races. In Cape Colony the blacks number 1,600,000 and the whites 400,000. In the Transvaal the blacks number 850,000 and the whites 250,000. In the Orange Free State the blacks number 200,000 and the whites 80,000, and in Natal the blacks number 530,000 and the whites 50,000, so that if an uprising should occur of the black population, they, hating the Boers, would make a terrible calamity.

Everyone can easily see that Great Britain can crush out these two small Republics. The British Parliament a few days ago, voted ten million pounds, or about fifty millions of dollars, to carry on the war. When she conquers these enemies she will demand probably one hundred millions of money to balance the account. This the Transvaal and Orange Free State cannot pay, and then Great Britain will seize the two Republics of all their lands and this pitiable war will end.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.
AT DAYBREAK.

When the tranquil moon is setting,
And the dawning in the East,
Like the beauty of the angels,
Is from more to more increased;
When the glory of the heavens
Is on either side made known,
In the silver light departing,
And the East resplendent grown,—

Then the spirit finds refreshing,
Then the heart renews its youth,
And the thoughts of long-dead mournings
Fill the mind with ancient truth.
All the thoughts that linger with us,
From the dawning clear of life,
Rise in silent aspirations,
Strong upliftings for the strife.

Feeling these, we watch the star-light
Fainting in the growing dawn,
Tiny blossoms shutting inward,
By the heavenly powers updrawn.
And the misty hills are heralds
Of a brighter, better day,
When the silver light is setting
And the golden gaineth sway.

First-day, Eleventh mo. 12.—Watching and prayer. Mark 13: 28-37.

In the second chapter of Nehemiah an account is given of Nehemiah's appearance before King Artaxerxes; of how the king noticed his sad countenance, asked the reason, and, on hearing it, gave him permission to go to Jerusalem, furnished him a guard, and ordered the keeper of the king's forest in Syria to supply him with wood.

When Nehemiah reached Jerusalem he seems to have found matters in a worse condition than he feared. Like the wise man that he was, he resolved to see for himself. He took a ride by night around the city. (2: 13.) "Neither," said he, "told I any man what my God put into my heart to do for Jerusalem." After this examination he said to the Jews, "Ye see the evil case we are in." He told what the king had done, and of the hand of his God, which was good upon him. This speech so encouraged the dwellers in Jerusalem that they cried, "Let us rise up and build." So the work began.

The enemies of the Jews, "Sanballat the Horonite, Tobiah the Ammonite, and Geshem the Arabian," laughed this attempt to scorn. In the third chapter is given an account of how the building progressed. It should be noticed that Nehemiah brought no regular workmen; he took the people just as they were and set them to work. What he did bring was leadership, and the inspiration of a man of strong faith in God.

The work went on rapidly. Why? Because (1) the people had a mind to work (4: 6); (2) they did the work which was at hand, "every one over against his own house" (3: 28); (3) it was made a national affair; (4) it was directed by an able man, who used all his powers to further the work of the Lord.

So great was the success of the Jews that it provoked the indignation of the enemies of the Jews. When Nehemiah heard of the words and the attitude of these enemies, he called down upon them the curse of God (4: 4). This is quite in accord with the character of the age. We meet with this vindictive feeling again and again in the Old Testament. Compare Psalms 79: 12; 109: 14; 137: 7-9; 28: 4, etc. Nehemiah knew that it was God's work which was ridiculed and hindered, and so felt strongly; it was not personal. It must not be forgotten that New Testament standards are in force now, and what might have been tolerated in his day is forbidden now.

7. "Sanballat," etc. Here is a list of the foes of the Jews. Sanballat the Horonite was probably a dweller in Beth-horon, a town about eighteen miles northwest of Jerusalem. He appears to have been a leader among the Samaritans. Nothing is known of Tobiah beyond what is related in Nehemiah. He appears to have represented the Ammonites. Geshem the Arabian (2: 19) was a leader among the Arabians. With these are united the Ashdodites, dwellers by the coast, Philistines. For various reasons these were all hostile to the Jews.

8. "To come, and to fight . . . and to hinder." Probably to take the city by surprise. The sudden attack would be likely "to cause confusion therein." Revised Version.

9. "Make our prayer." Not Nehemiah only, but his companions as well. Nehemiah's trust in God is brought out again and again in the narrative. "And set a watch." He prayed to God, but he did his part also. "God helps them that help themselves." He gives man powers which are to be used. He gives curative qualities to plants, to drugs, to waters, for man to use for healing purposes. Christ himself anointed the eyes of a blind man with clay when He might have spoken the word alone. The apostle James advises those to whom he wrote to use a common application for healing, and then pray (Jas. 5: 4). Nehemiah says, watch and pray; James, anoint and pray. Prayer can never be a substitute for duty. "Day and night." Nehemiah took no risks. Constant watchfulness was needful. Many times were plots against the Jews discovered and brought to nought. Compare verse 12.

10. "We are not able to build the wall." It cannot be wondered at that the Jews began to get disheartened. "Bearers of burdens." The workers. "There is so much rubbish." There was so much to be cleared away that the strength and endurance of the laborers were giving way.

11. "Our adversaries." Compare Ezra 4: 1. There was the ever-present danger from without. "Said." This was probably reported by spies.

12. The meaning of this verse is not very clear. "Dwelt by them." Probably those Jews who lived in the cities and villages near the Samaritans, etc. These had sent men to help their fellow countrymen of Jerusalem. See 3: 2, 5, 7, 13. "Ten times." Possibly the exact number, but probably an expression to indicate many times. "From all places, ye must return unto us." Revised Version. The meaning appears to be, that these outlying towns and villages were in danger of attack and needed the men who had been sent to Jerusalem.

13. "In the lowest parts of the space, behind the wall, in the open places." Revised Version. "After their families." This would make each one the defender of his own family and home.

14. "Looked," etc. Probably he inspected his arrangements for defence. "Said." He encourages them to remember that the Lord is on their side, and exhorts them to fight for all that they hold dear.

15. "That it was known unto us." The plan of a sudden attack. "God had brought their counsel to nought." Through the foresight and active measures of Nehemiah.

16. "Half of my servants." Nehemiah's personal retinue. "Habergeons." Coats of mail. Revised Version. "Rulers were behind." So as to be ready to give orders in case of an attack.

18. "The builders, every one, had his sword girded by his side." In this part of the work both hands were needed; but the weapon was ready for use. "He that sounded the trumpet was by me." Wherever Nehemiah went he had his trumpeter ready to sound the alarm and to give orders.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. Faith and works go together.
2. Personal encouragement is of great value.
3. Have a mind to work.

THE LIVING BREAD.

John 6: 26-35:

Second-day, Eleventh mo. 6.—Our daily bread. Luke 11: 1-3.
 Third-day, Eleventh mo. 7.—Bread from heaven. Ex. 16: 11-15; Ps. 78: 23-25.
 Fourth-day, Eleventh mo. 8.—Not by bread alone. Matt. 4: 1-4.
 Fifth-day, Eleventh mo. 9.—Perishable meat. Isa. 55: 1-3.
 Sixth-day, Eleventh mo. 10.—My meat is to do His will. John 4: 27-34.
 Seventh-day, Eleventh mo. 11.—The bread of God. John 6: 41-51.

We have this week a topic that is pre-eminently the source of the teaching of Friends concerning the communion. It is taken from the fourth Gospel, written long after the others, giving the permanently spiritual form of the Gospel and corrective of the errors that had sprung up in the first century of the Christian Church. The Scripture lesson is taken from the sermon on the Bread of Life, preached by our Lord at Capernaum, at the end of the Galilean ministry, and nearly a year before the Paschal Supper at which He has been supposed to have instituted an ordinance of outward eating and drinking, but in reality seems only to have given a spiritual signification to a passing type of the Jewish dispensation, but in no way dignifying it with the sacredness of a perpetual observance.

But the sixth chapter of John contains the statement of the eternal principles of the spiritual life. "It treats essentially," says Westcott, "of spiritual realities with which no external act, as such, can be extensive. The well known words of Augustine, 'believe and thou hast eaten,' give the sum of the thoughts in a luminous and pregnant sentence." It is also significant that John, who gives so fully this discourse on spiritual eating and drinking, and who also gives with such fulness the discourse on spiritual truth at the last Passover Supper, seems to have purposely omitted any reference to any external act of eating and drinking that could be called "The Lord's Supper."

Our lesson text is rich in truth beyond almost any other passage in the Bible. We can only note a point here and there of its fulness. In verse 26 there is an unworthy motive exposed. These men had reduced Jesus Christ to a mere purveyor for their empty stomachs. They pretend an interest in Him because they hope for some further material gain. But He refuses to be measured so small and exposes their amazing littleness. Are not some of us also in danger of estimating Christ and Christianity from a material standpoint, and of seeking full stomachs and well clad backs, while our souls are empty of eternal truth and devoid of faith in the supernatural power of Christ?

Verse 27 calls for a total reversal of life. Change the order of your seeking; put the spiritual need first; make supreme the search of the bread that abideth. You ate the bread that perished yesterday, and are hungry again this morning. I have come to give bread that "abideth" forever. The hearers seem to catch only the words "work" and "eternal life," and fitting them to their own narrow conceptions of religious life, they ask that old, time-worn, Pharasaic question, What is the meritorious work that secures eternal life? meaning, doubtless, some added obedience to a rabbinical precept, or some ritual observance. Once more our Lord calls them back to foundation truth. "The work of God—why, its foundation, from which all else must spring, its first step that decides its course, is to believe on Me—to receive Me. I am the bread that gives life. Only he that eateth me shall live. Bread for the body gives only life for the body for a time, and he that eateth it will die. Bread for the inner life, the true man, gives man life forevermore. Your error is that you are blind to your opportunity. You have no spiritual appreciation. You utterly misconceive my mission, purpose and place in the world. You are willing to use me for your stomachs, but not for your souls."

How, then, is Christ our living Bread? Not through any mysterious sacrament wherein outward bread by priestly action is turned into spiritual food. Not by any invisible grace connected with the eating in faith of an outward bread according to Divine ordinance. All outward eating and drinking is equally sacred according to this sixth chapter of John, for it is all a symbol, ever suggestive of that other spiritual eating and drinking by which the spirit of man shall live forever. The body is of the earth, earthy. It therefore must be sustained by food and drink that also are earthy. It continually wastes away. Therefore food and drink must be continually taken to replenish waste and supply needed strength. But man is more than of the earth, earthy. The Spirit is of God who gave it. Bread for the Spirit must come from the world to which it belongs. Man is more like God than aught else in the universe. He was made for divine fellowship, divine indwelling, for the partaking of the divine nature. That comes to him through Jesus Christ, the sent of God, the Bread from heaven. As the body partakes of its bread with the hand, so the soul of man receives Christ by faith. Food gives strength to my body. Christ gives strength to my soul. As food is crushed, broken, slain for me, so Christ was bruised, broken slain for me—not that I might eat of outward flesh and blood, but that I might receive the spiritual good thereby secured. We eat of Christ as we receive Him into our souls.

We receive Him according to that which is revealed to us concerning Him in the written word. We cannot feed on the written word. It is simply a direction, an indication of what there is in Him for us. The words which He spake are spirit and life only as they bring us into vital contact with Him. If we assimilate the Christ life and strength, we can say with Paul, "I live, yet not I, for Christ liveth in me."

News from the Field.

The semi-annual meeting of College Park Association of Friends will be held in San Jose, California, on the 4th of Eleventh month.

The Meeting for Sufferings of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting has issued a strong and timely appeal in behalf of the long-suffering Doukhobors. It sets forth the needy condition of these people and calls upon Friends and others who sympathize with this interesting people to come to their aid. Joseph S. Elkinton, of Philadelphia, has gone to spend the winter among the Doukhobors, to assist in distributing supplies and in other ways relieving their distress and ministering to their wants. It is a noble service which our elderly Friend has undertaken. Checks or money for assisting in the work may be sent to William Evans, 252 South Front Street, Philadelphia.

Pliny Fry, who has for some years lived at Muscatine, Iowa, has moved to Oskaloosa, Iowa, where his future home will be. He made an extended visit in the Eastern States about eight years ago, which many of us remember.

Friends' University now enrolls over 150 students and more are entering every week. It is confidently expected that the enrollment will reach 200 before the year ends.

Joshua L. Baily, of Philadelphia, made a most acceptable visit to Penn College after Kansas Yearly Meeting.

H. C. Fellow, Ph.D., a well known educator, has left Stella Academy, in Oklahoma, to become a professor in Friends' University.

In our recent report of Indiana Yearly Meeting, an expression was applied to the combined work of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Association and the Yearly Meeting's Mission Committee, which has seemed to many of our readers, harsh and improper. We regret exceedingly that the words were printed and we wish it understood that they represented solely the personal opinion of the reporter.

Our friend, Charles Baldwin, of Rosendale, Oregon, sends the following interesting "testimony of disownment," issued in 1744, by Dublin Monthly Meeting, Ireland. Charles Baldwin thinks the "E. B." here mentioned was the wife of William Baldwin, his great-grandfather:

"Whereas: E B Daughter of B C deceased was educated in the profession of us the people called Quakers, and did some times frequent our religious meetings, but for want of a faithful adherence to the dictates of that devine principle which was sufficient to have preserved her in a due observance of the devine command, honer thy father and mother &c. as well as the known rules of our society, hath been prevailed on to suffer herself to be joined in marriage by a priest to a man of a different persuasion in matter of faith, and without her mothers consent, we do therefore hereby disown the said E B to be of our society untill she come to witness that godly sorrow which worketh true repentance, which that the Lord may mercifully grant her is our sincere desir

NORTH CAROLINA YEARLY MEETING.

Friends' Mission, Va.—About the first of Ninth month I had the pleasure of spending some time at the above place. A very profitable meeting of nearly two weeks' duration was held, in which Sarah Newlin, from Portland, Maine, and Lorena Reynolds, from Springfield, N. C., took active part. We believe these meetings were very helpful to the community.

It is wonderful to see the change which has come to this district. We used to be much troubled with intemperance; consequently disorderly conduct in our meetings was not uncommon, but now we have good, quiet congregations, and whilst there is still considerable drinking all around, yet public sentiment is rapidly rising against it. Our temperance organization, which has not had the attention and effort it deserves, for the past two years, will be revived, and we expect to make vigorous efforts in this branch of the work. Another remarkable change has come, which I feel is the answer to our many prayers. Within the radius of a few miles there has been running every year ten or twelve brandy distilleries, consuming thousands of bushels of beautiful apples. Efforts have been made at Stewart and other points to evaporate them. This summer a gentleman from New York erected a large evaporator near our mission, and up till 10th of Ninth month had purchased and used four thousand five hundred (4,500) bushels of apples; had shipped eleven thousand (11,000) pounds, and was running his machine night and day. Through this industry all these distilleries were closed, and at the time we were there not one was running. We think this a most encouraging feature.

I am also glad to state that a railroad is being rapidly constructed from Mt. Airy to a point near the pinnacles of the dam, where recently large sawmills have been started. All these enterprises are increasing the value and importance of our mission.

I also visited the new school and meeting house on top of the mountain, which was purchased by our committee last year. This is an encouraging field. E. A. Holton, of Yadkinville, N. C., has gone to take charge of the school and other religious work.

Samuel Pickett and wife Louella, of Burlington, N. C., took charge of the mission Ninth month 1st. These Friends have been highly recommended, and we believe they are in sympathy with the work and people. The school opened 8th of Ninth month, with larger numbers. Lorena Reynolds has charge of the primary department. We also feel that her gospel labors will be of great value in the meeting. She is beloved by all who know her.

We are encouraged to believe that this year's work will be marked with great blessing from our Heavenly Father. I further wish to state for the information of my many friends and generous helpers, that our last yearly meeting (at my personal request) accepted the property of Friends' Academy, of Davie County, Augusta P. O., N. C., and instructed the Blue Ridge Mission Committee to have management of same. Details of working both schools will be given separately in the report at end of the year.

We shall be glad to receive donations of articles for the home. Please send addressed to David E. Sampson, superintendent of Friends' Mission, Va., Mt. Airy, N. C.

We request that a list of all articles contributed be sent to the superintendent, East Bend, N. C. All moneys should be forwarded to our treasurer, J. Elwood Cox, High Point, N. C.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING.

Western Training School.—We have not given the readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND any account of our work for some time. Possibly a little account of the Lord's dealings with us may be of interest. For two years the work was carried on at Le Grand, Iowa. The favor of the Lord was over us and out from our midst have gone several who are now recorded ministers, holding positions in the church. As the work went on, we felt the need of being in a larger place with greater opportunities for practical work and the many other added advantages that would be secured by such a change. This fall we felt the time had come, so we moved to Marshalltown, Iowa, and began our work, Tenth month 3d. The blessing of the Lord has been over us in such a way as to make it very manifest that the change was right. The school has never had such bright prospects as at present. The Lord is raising up for us Friends and helpers and making the work to grow in favor both before God and man. A deep spiritual atmosphere pervades the entire work. Already the Lord has most blessedly broken in upon us several times in an extraordinary manner. Tears or smiles as a manifestation of deep feeling and interest are common.

We have been much cheered and helped by the recent visits of Allen Jay, of Indiana Yearly Meeting, and Louis I. Hadley, of Western Yearly Meeting. Their earnest words of teaching were much appreciated by the students. Arthur Chilson, of Ohio Yearly Meeting dropped in upon us a few moments and gave us a little taste of his missionary enthusiasm. We shall be glad to have the readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND remember us frequently in their prayers. What we are, God has made us in answer to prayer. To Him be all the praise.

"MOTHER'S NOTIONS."

Good for Young People to Follow.

"My little grandson often comes up to show me how large the muscles of his arms are.

"He was a delicate child, but has developed into a strong, healthy boy, and Postum Cereal Food Coffee has been the principal factor.

"I was induced to give him the Postum Coffee because of my own experience with it.

"I am sixty years old, and have been a victim of nervous dyspepsia for many years. Have tried all sorts of patent medicines and had treatment from many physicians, but no permanent relief came. I believe nervous dyspepsia suffer more than other sick people, as they are affected mentally as well as physically.

"I used to read the Postum Cereal advertisements every week in our paper. At first I gave but little attention to them, thinking it was a fraud, like so many I had tried, but finally something was said in one of the advertisements that made me conclude to try it. I was very particular to have it prepared strictly according to directions, and use good rich cream. It was very nice, indeed, and about bedtime I said to the members of the family that I believed I felt better. One of them laughed and said, 'That's another of mother's notions,' but the notion has not left me yet.

"I continued to improve right along after leaving off coffee, and taking Postum Cereal Food Coffee, and now, after three years' use, I feel so well that I am almost young again. I know Postum was the cause of the change in my health, and I cannot say too much in its favor. I wish I could persuade all nervous people to use it. I have no objections to your using my name, if it will do good even to one sufferer." Mrs. M. L. Turner, 2619 Capitol Avenue, Omaha, Neb.

NEW YORK YEARLY MEETING.

At the Farmington Quarterly Meeting, held at Hartland, the company and services of our friends, Lindley M., and Elizabeth C. F. Stevens, from Clinton Corners, were greatly appreciated. At each of the three meetings for worship, L. M. Stevens preached the Word with clearness; and E. C. F. Stevens took part in prayer and testimony to our edification. At the meeting of ministers and elders, the subject referred from last quarterly meeting—"The Priesthood of believers"—was opened by Rebecca Flagler; nearly all taking some part. The committee was continued and directed to propose subjects for future consideration. The Christian Endeavor Union was opened by a service of song conducted by George Hull. E. C. F. Stevens spoke upon "Systematic and Proportionate Giving," after which L. M. Stevens gave a gospel address.

On Fourth-day morning the Evangelistic Committee met; followed by the regular meeting for worship and the business session. In the evening, the Bible School Conference discussed the subject, "How to Increase the Attendance of our Bible Schools." On Fifth-day morning, the closing meeting was a profitable and encouraging one, in which there were many prayers and words of praise to our loving Saviour. The kindness and liberal hospitality of Hartland Friends were gratefully spoken of. Some of our dear Friends were prevented from attending by sickness. Much love and sympathy were expressed for them and they were tenderly remembered in prayer. We could but feel sad in missing the presence of dear Ann M. Haines, with her wise counsel and motherly encouragement. As we remember her faithfulness, we trust that her example may stimulate us to united effort, that no part of the work may flag. We were glad that our aged friend, Jesse Haines, with his beloved wife, were able to be in attendance. After the quarterly meeting, L. M. and E. C. F. Stevens attended the forenoon and evening meetings at Collins, and the regular Fourth-day evening meeting at Batavia. Their company socially and religious labors in both places were helpful and encouraging. Our next quarterly meeting will be held at Collins.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING.

Nathan D. Knight has recently entered upon pastoral work the limits of Russiaville, Lynn and West Middleton Meetings.

Hugh Earl Forbes has entered upon pastoral work in the limits of Greentown and New Salem meetings.

James A. Ellis, and May, his wife, have recently received minutes liberating them for service in the limits of Western and Indiana Yearly Meetings.

David Hadly recently attended New London Quarterly Meeting, looking after the interest of the general work.

James Newlin, who has been confined much at home with his invalid wife, will take charge of the work in Bethel meeting, as pastor.

Solomon A. Haworth, a young minister, is attending Chicago University and has, in connection with his studies, taken pastoral charge in La Porte Meeting.

Orvil Jones, who has been engaged the past year in pastoral work at Greenfield, Indiana, has entered upon similar work in the limits of West Indianapolis, and Haughville Meeting.

Robert E. Pretlow, of Thorntown, Indiana, has been attending the Friends' Meeting in La Fayette, Indiana, for several Sabbaths since yearly meeting.

Thomas W. Truman has recently removed, and entered upon pastoral work in the limits of Hazelwood and North Branch Meetings.

Charles L. Jessup, of Friendswood, Indiana, has recently been in the limits of Iowa Yearly Meeting in the interest of temperance work. He is well fitted for this work.

It has been truthfully said that Western Yearly Meeting has furnished more substantial, talented men than any other yearly meeting. All of the college presidents of Friends' colleges in the Western States, including Earlham, Penn, Kansas University, and Pacific College, were raised in this yearly meeting, as well as many others that have been very useful in moulding the interests of religious and educational matters.

Murray Kenworthy, Gertrude Moon, and Clara Maris are now in attendance in the Biblical Department of Earlham College.

Williamsburg, Indiana.—Cherry Grove Monthly Meeting was held at Center, Indiana, Tenth month 14th. Isaac Frazier, from Martindale, gave an interesting talk from the words "Press Forward." Ira Johnson followed by using the text, "I will send hornets before thee," Exodus 23: 28. It has been said by some that they never experienced such a meeting; everybody seemed happy, and we feel that we can hardly praise God enough for the blessings of the day.

SADIE UPDEGRAFT.

A notice placed in THE AMERICAN FRIEND early in the spring, requesting that donations of flowers from Friends' Christian Endeavor Societies surrounding Indianapolis, be sent for use in hospital mission work, was so generously responded to that the following report of the season's work is gladly given:

The Fifth month brought many boxes of wild flowers with their rare daintiness to cheer the sick, and were received with great delight. Sixth month scattered fragrant roses through many wards of the hospitals, and sprays of cherries, currants and gooseberries were hailed with joy. Seventh and Eighth month's heat and sultriness had also their quota of fruits and flowers to gladden the suffering ones, and Ninth month still had something of brightness and cheer left to offer the "shut-ins."

From the man in the hospital who buried his face in clover blossoms, and so heartily expressed his pleasure in them; the little orphan who delightedly sat down on the floor to gather a chubby handful of flowers from a box; the old German woman who awoke from a nap in a hospital chair to find a bunch of sweet blossoms on her lap; the boy so lonely in the consumptive ward, whose wan face lighted up with smiles over a bunch of sweet peas; the rude factory girl with tears in her eyes, who eagerly grasped the gay handful of nasturtiums, to the sullen woman who first refused the offered gift, then yielded to entreaties and chose a deep-red rose, losing swiftly her defiant look under the influence of the flowers,—these all are samples of the experience of the Distributing Committee.

Those societies responding so heartily to the call for flowers were Bridgeport, Noblesville, Greentown, Friendswood, Danville, Plainfield, Mooresville and Bloomingdale, beside personal donations.

During the five months ninety-two boxes, ranging from shoe box size to hat and suit boxes, eleven large basketfuls, several large individual bouquets, representing thousands of bouquets, were distributed through the following institutions: St. Vincent's, Deaconess and City Hospital, White Orphans' Home, Eleanor Hospital for Children, Door of Hope, and to factory girls at the cotton mills.

We are very grateful, indeed, for the hearty co-operation of the friends who made all this delightful work possible, and feel sure that the benediction of God has rested upon those sending the flowers, local committees distributing them, and those receiving. Surely the "God bless you," and thanks of old and young, the smiles and tears that greeted the distributors were enough assurance of the pleasure the flowers gave the recipients, and the prayers and Scripture verses accompanying the flowers will bear fruit as sure as the Master said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

Last year was the beginning of this mission work, and the increase in quantity of flowers this year has been six hundred per cent.

It is with profound feelings of gratitude and pleasure that we all can look back over the summer's work, glad in that much sunshine and cheer has been scattered, and our own lives broadened by self-sacrifice and sympathetic contact with the less fortunate of our fellow-creatures.

CORRECTION.

The first line of Sarah J. Troth's poem, "Communion," printed in our issue of last week, should read "Are we, dear friends in very deed communing," instead of "in every deed."

DIED.

WOOD.—Died at St. Albans, Maine, Ninth month 9th, 1899, Edward G. Wood, in the 54th year of his age, a minister belonging to Lewiston Monthly Meeting of Friends, Maine. His early home was in the limits of Adrain Quarterly Meeting, Mich., where he was recorded a minister and served as pastor in two of its meetings. He was also clerk of Ohio Yearly Meeting at one time. He removed from Ypsilanti, Michigan, to Milton, in New York Yearly Meeting, and from there had his membership transferred to New England Yearly Meeting. He failed rapidly in the last two weeks of his sickness, and in his last moment of consciousness, when asked if he was trusting Jesus, his reply was, "Yes."

News and Events.

General Cipriano Castro, the instigator and leader of the revolution in Venezuela, crowned his successes by occupying, on the 22d ult., Caracas, the capital of the country. He was warmly received by the people, and, if dispatches are to be believed, the majority desire peace. President Andrade, the lawful executive, retired from the city most precipitately upon the advance of the enemy, even abandoning the Government without notifying the Cabinet or Government Council, as is required by the Constitution. The form of the new Government is still in doubt, though Castro has assumed control. In the meantime further discontent is brewing, now in the shape of an incipient revolution, headed by General Jose Manuel Hernandez. He left Caracas for Ocumare on the 29th to perfect his plans. He is said to have 2,000 followers already. The situation is still critical.

An understanding has been reached by which it is expected that negotiations will soon be opened at Madrid for a new treaty between the United States and Spain. The old treaty, which dated back to 1795, was an antiquated document, many of its provisions having no relevancy to present-day history; yet while in a large measure unsatisfactory to both countries, it had never been found feasible to form a new treaty. It was entirely abrogated by the war, however, and the only international agreement now in existence is the peace treaty, which is confined to the events growing out of the war, and has no reference to commerce, navigation, extradition, and the other many relations between nations in time of peace. The coming negotiations will be for the purpose of forming such a treaty of commerce and friendship.

The engagement of the English and Boers at Glencoe has not proved to be the decisive victory it was first reported to be. It now seems rather to have been a well-planned and successful retreat forced by the Boers. The English, under General Yule, retired upon Ladysmith, where General Sir George White is located with his forces. The two bodies of English troops are, at this writing, awaiting an attack upon Ladysmith by the Boers, 15,000 strong. The English, with 12,000, are therefore close-pressed by the enemy. The importance of the movements of the Boers into Natal, in the northern portion of which Ladysmith is located, is emphasized by the fact that President Kruger himself is reported to be on the ground with his army, and that General Joubert is on his way to join the menacing army. A desperate battle is imminent, and its results will be important. Among the losses of the English at Glencoe was that of General Sir William Penn Symons, who was wounded in the engagement, and later died, after being taken prisoner by the enemy.

A correspondent of the Chicago "Tribune" has made a striking and definite estimate of the territory held by the United States troops in the Philippines. The entire area held by General Otis on the Island of Luzon is 117 square miles. The entire area of the island is about 42,000 square miles, or something less than the size of the State of Pennsylvania, and the occupied territory would be about the size of Philadelphia County. Mindanao, the next largest island in the group, has not been visited by our troops, and the American detachments in Negros and Cebu are in frequent collision with "robber bands," who challenge our possession. The "Tribune's" representative writes that with almost 42,000 square miles of country in Luzon, from which to draw support, "and with boats coming in from Hong Kong, Japan, Central and South America, the insurgents were doing well so far as supplies are concerned." The federal administration hopes, during the coming campaign, to wage a much more effective war against Aguinaldo and his followers, and its preparations have been on a scale commensurate with its aims. The army has reached its full strength of 100,000 men, and by Christmas Otis will have 68,000 in his command. He may then be able to hold the positions he once seizes, and not be forced to retire for lack of forces to garrison the captured country. This is alleged to have been one of the most fertile sources of failure thus far on his part. His own ability has also been questioned.

SUBSCRIBERS' WANTS.

This department of "Subscribers' Wants" will be found of value by anyone wishing to reach the Friends with a small advertisement. It has already done excellent service for those who have used it. The varied character of the notices shows that its value is confined to no particular class of "want" advertising, but that it may be used with advantage by all who have anything to advertise. Five lines, one time, cost only 25 cents; additional lines 5 cents each. Extra insertions at the same rate.

FIGHTING FATE.

In the southwest corner of France, between the rivers Adour and Garonne, are long stretches of pine-woods, green and cool.

Where these pines now stand was a barren waste in the middle of the last century. Sun and wind vied with each other in making the land drier and dustier. Over the stormy Bay of Biscay came winds that set up great sand-storms, and sometimes buried whole villages. The whole region was one of hopelessness and despair. Fate was against it.

But at last there came along a man who acknowledged fate only as something to be overcome. His name was Bremonter, and he was an inspector of roads.

He began fencing in the desert. He built a fence, and behind it planted a handful of broom seeds. Behind the broom seeds he put seeds of the pine. The fence protected the broom seeds, and the broom grew. Then the broom in its turn afforded shelter to the delicate pine shoots.

Soon the pines spread, and their tough roots bound the sandy soil together. The first step was accomplished. Then canals were made to drain the wet parts and carry water to the dry.

Thus did one man, by patient effort, turn a dreary desert into a home for an industrious and healthy population. It was an instance of triumph over fate.

THE MOVING WALL.

"Life seems always just running up against an insurmountable wall," said one whose years have been full of care and struggle. "But then," he added, with a smile following the sigh, "the wall always moves back about two feet when we get to it."

That is the description of many a life and of the carrying on of many an enterprise. The wall of difficulties, dark and insurmountable, seems to bar the path just ahead. We are always coming to the place beyond which we can see no way to go farther, only the wall moves back a little! If it would only go down and leave the prospect clear, what a blessed relief it would be, and how joyously we could press forward with our plans and our work. But it seldom does that. A few have the pleasant onlook, the clear way, but far more than we know are of those who toil their lives through with some threatening barrier looming just ahead. But the lesson our friend had learned is that it Wrecked or A Striking Rescued? Salvation Wall Chart.

BY M. W. KNAPP.

LITHOGRAPHED IN SEVEN COLORS.

22x28—Tinned for Hanging.

It forcefully pictures the RIVER OF DEATH sweeping its multitudes in the "Death Boats of Sin" past the "Light-houses of Salvation," over the frightful "Falls of Eternal Despair." Also, tributary streams which feed the "River of Death," "Plains of Regeneration," "Holiness Heights" and "Heaven"

It is a Mighty Silent Preacher.

It warns of sin and convicts for Full Salvation.

It's silent arguments are unanswerable. It will enable you to preach to your family and visitors in a way that you cannot afford to miss.

At a large expense it has been prepared by an expert artist and skillful lithographers, and will be an edifying ornament, framed, or as a wall chart, in any home.

CONVERTED BY SILENCE.

At the opening of each conference service held in connection with the famous Mildmay Deaconesses Institutions of London, England, a season of silent prayer is observed, usually for about five minutes. This is most impressive,—a crowded house, all heads bowed in prayer to Him who, unseen, is "in the midst."

Through the influence of one of these silent seasons a gentleman was converted. He relates the circumstances himself: "Such a thing as attending a gospel meeting on a week night I had not done for years. But to please a dear sister and her friend, I promised to go for just one evening to the Mildmay conference.

"What struck me first was the solemnity of the silent prayer. To witness so many hundreds bowed in solemn silence before the throne of grace, pleading especially for the unconverted there present, filled me with awe, and made me feel decidedly uncomfortable. I wondered whether I was to be really converted that night. To pray for such a thing was impossible. I did not wish it.

"I left the hall anxious and miserable. Till late in the morning I wrestled in prayer to God for pardon and peace without obtaining an answer, and, quite worn out, at 4 a.m., I lay down to rest." On waking, after prayer, he found peace in reading St. Mark 11:24-26.

THE KING AND THE MAGICIAN.

There is a good story from the London Tit-bits of a magician who is now dead. He was a great traveler, and in his wanderings landed on one occasion in far-away New Zealand:

It was arranged that he should give an exhibition of mind reading before the king of the Maoris.

After some parleying it was decided that the king himself should conceal the article which the magician was to discover. The mind reader left the room and after a time was brought back blind-folded, as is the custom in such performances. After some time the magician declared that the hidden article was in the king's mouth. His majesty shook his head savagely in the negative. The magician insisted upon his point, and demanded that the king's mouth be opened wide. The king refused. The magician insisted and the excitement became very great, until at last the dusky king reluctantly opened his jaws. The article was not there!

The next instant, however, the king was taken with a violent fit of coughing. He had tried to swallow the lost article, a button, but could not, and was compelled to cough it up. The Maoris were uproarious with mirth. They did not know which to admire the more—the wisdom of the magician or the heroism of the king.

to dose, deluge and finally derange your stomach. Ten to one if it cures your trouble, the drugs you have taken will bring on another hardly less serious. Why jump from the frying-pan into the fire?

The Electropoise will cure most diseases without medicine, by simply placing the body in condition to receive oxygen enough to purify and keep in health. We say "most diseases," for the Electropoise will not cure everything; but where it fails to cure it will afford relief that you would not knowingly go without.

The Electropoise makes well and keeps well, prevents as well as cures—used once a day will keep the doctor away.

A DOCTOR WRITES:

"Without a doubt the Electropoise has the gift and power to cure multitudes who without it must surely die, and that, too, in early life, or in the very maturity of strength when their untimely death is most difficult of solution."

REV. GILBERT C. MOULSDALE, LL.D.,
WRITES FROM BOONTON, N. J., UNDER DATE OF MARCH 27th, 1899:

"I can bear witness to the curative effects of Electropoise. In December of 1895 I was threatened with complete nervous prostration and was also troubled with Insomnia and Dyspepsia. My case was so serious that some of my friends advised me to quit preaching, at least for a year. I consulted several physicians, one of them an eminent specialist; but nothing seemed to help me. At the time I was suffering most, a friend came to hold services for me and urged me to try the Electropoise, which I did. From that time I ceased taking hypnotics. I grew gradually better; and now I can say I am as well, apparently, as I have ever been. I regard the Electropoise as an instrument of great curative value."

Our 128-page illustrated book will be mailed free upon request to yourself and friends.

Also upon request we will mail a 12-page treatise on rheumatism and its cure.

April 11th, 1899.

DEAR SIR:—

In reply to your favor of the 6th inst., would say that I have sold the Electropoise for four years. Have spent upwards of $500 for advertising. I have devoted a part of my time only to the business and find, that after proper instructions, purchasers are always satisfied with the results. This is gratifying and makes the business a pleasant one and tends to increase sales.

My profits are more than $1,600.00.

Russia has at last agreed to arbitrate with the United States the claims resulting from the seizure of American sealers in the Behring Sea, off the Siberian coast, which have been pending for about eight years. A protocol between the two Governments has been drawn up, and the final formalities are expected to be concluded next month. This agreement of Russia and America to arbitrate a long-standing dispute is indicative of a state of good feeling existing between the two countries, and reflects great credit upon our new ambassador to Russia—Charlemagne Tower—whose efforts were largely responsible for the present status of the case.

"Men of the noblest dispositions think themselves happiest when others share their happiness with them."

CROMWELL AND AMERICA.

In the first instalment of his study of Oliver Cromwell, in the November "Century," Mr. Morley takes occasion to discredit the report that the great English statesman ever set sail for this country, with the intention of making his home in New England.

There is no circumstance in the fable, though so circumstantially related, that, in 1636, in company with his cousin Hampden, despairing of his country, he took his passage to America, and that the vessel was stopped by an order in Council. All the probabilities are against it, and there is no evidence for it. What is credible enough is Clarendon's story that five years later, on the day when the Great Remonstrance was passed, Cromwell whispered to Falkland that if it had been rejected he would have sold all he had the next morning, and never have seen England more, and he knew there many other honest men of the same resolution. So near, the Royalist historian reflects, was this poor kingdom at that time to its deliverance.

HIS "SHILLIN' OR TWO."

Here is a characteristic anecdote of James Tyson, bushman, the wealthy, benevolent, but eccentric Australian:

A few years ago, when the large cathedral of Brisbane, was in course of construction, a collector for the building fund called upon a well-known mercantile firm for a subscription, but he was politely told that he should go to the rich people, who might be in a better position to "help the work along."

"Go to Jimmy Tyson—he has more than any of us." Up to that time the name of the late Mr. James Tyson, the Queensland millionaire, had never been seen on any list for more than a comparatively small sum.

"Well," said the collector, "as Tyson is a rich man, I will go to him for a donation."

"Do," said the head of the firm; "and whatever he gives you we will guarantee you the same amount."

The collector, a few days after, called upon Mr. Tyson, and related to him what had taken place, and concluded by saying:

"So, Mr. Tyson, I do not know what amount the other firm is going to give until I have your name on my list."

"Well," said Mr. Tyson, in a gruff voice,

EAST AND WEST.

When one of the regiments of volunteers from the Pacific coast was lately at San Francisco, being mustered out after a year's service in the Philippines, a lady who belonged to a volunteers' aid association engaged one of the soldiers in conversation. She asked him:

"Were you well treated while you were in the East?"

"East, ma'am? I've never been East," he answered. "I was born in Californy, and I've never been farther East than Salt Lake City."

"But I mean the far East," she said.

"Well, ma'am, Salt Lake's 'far East' to me. Never been farther."

"But you've been in Manila, haven't you?"

"Sure."

"But we call that East, you know."

"Manila east? Well, I reckon it's a heap west of here. We started here and sailed straight west all the time till we got there."

"Yes, I know; but you can get east by sailing west, you know."

"Well, ma'am," answered the soldier, "I've been wantin' to go East all my life, but if I've got to go that way to get there, I'm going to stay right here all my life! I've got enough of goin' East that way."

Drawn from the Portrait of Cromwell by Samuel Cooper, in Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge, England.

CAN you tell, offhand, in just what century Cromwell was born? Can you even tell how he died?

Reading history is delightful when it can be taken as a recreation. The Century Magazine has printed some of the greatest histories of our time, and in 1900 it will follow them with a superbly illustrated life of Oliver Cromwell, written by the Right Hon. John Morley, M.P., than whom there is no one more competent to treat Cromwell in the spirit of the end of the nineteenth century. Mr. Morley is the authorized biographer of Gladstone, and his work as a historian is well known.

The illustrations of the history will be remarkable. Besides original drawings by well-known artists, there will be valuable unpublished portraits, permission to reproduce which has been given by Her Majesty the Queen, and by the owners of some of the most famous collections in Europe.

Why not make this your serious reading for 1900, remembering, too, that it is only one of scores of good things in The Century?

Begin your Subscription with November.

The November Century

in which the Cromwell history opens, is one of the most beautiful numbers of a magazine ever issued, printed in colors, the cover designed by Ernest Haskell.

It contains the first instalment of "The Biography of a Grizzly," the most important work of Ernest Seton-Thompson, the author of "Wild Animals I Have Known," strikingly illustrated by the author.

"The Autobiography of a Quack," the serial story by Dr. S. Weir Mitchell, begins in this issue, a curious psychological study, full of humor and entertainment.

Mark Twain furnishes a chapter from the autobiography which it was said recently he was working on and would hold back for a hundred years.

Captain Joshua Slocum's "Sailing Alone Around the World" is one of the hits of the magazine year. In the November Century Captain Slocum describes his call at Juan Fernandez and his visit with the family of Robert Louis Stevenson at Samoa.

Governor Theodore Roosevelt contributes an article on "Military Preparedness and Unpreparedness," and President Eliot of Harvard writes of "The Forgotten Millions." There are three unusually strong stories (all of them illustrated), and a most entertaining article, illustrated, on "Wagner from Behind the Scenes," describing "scenery that acts."

SHOULD WE KNOW HIM?

I wonder if we should know Christ really, if He came among us now, following the same rule—i. e., if the revelation were befitting our time as His revelation eighteen hundred years ago fitted His time. If He came now to reveal His Father, should we know Him? Except we have come to Him in our hearts we should not know Him; except He is our life, except He is to us the power of our being, we should not know Him. We might perhaps know Him if we had got on a little; we might suspect it was He. I do not feel at all sure I should know Him. I should like to get so far before I die that I would most certainly know Him if He came—if He came according to the law of the time of this world—not with a halo of glory around His head, as the painters paint Him, but just like one of ourselves, doing the common work of the world. I cannot in the least trust myself that I should know Him. I can only hope that one day I shall be such that I should know Him. And that is another way of putting the end of our being; for to know Him is life eternal—not to know Him after the flesh, but to know Him as the living One, to know God in Him and ourselves in God and in Him.

STILL, STILL WITH THEE.

Lo, I am with you alway. Matt. 28: 20.

"Still, still with Thee where purple morning breaketh," Still, still with Thee, the whole bright, livelong day.
Earth hath no charm to draw me from Thy presence,
Still, still with Thee, my Saviour, all the way.

Still, still with Thee—life's duties claim my powers,
And now, dear Lord, I cannot think of Thee,
Yet let me feel Thy presence still beside me,
And know, dear Lord, that I am still, still with Thee.

Still, still with Thee—earth's shadows close around me,
Thy face, dear Lord, I hardly now can see,
Close, closer put Thy loving arms around me,
Still let me rest, since I am still with Thee.

Still, still with Thee, when I shall reach the margin
Of that lone stream that lies 'twixt Heaven and me;
Safe may I enter, free from doubt and fearing,
Since, O my Saviour, I am still, still with Thee.

"Still, still with Thee," eternity shall echo,
When in Thy presence evermore I'll be,
Nothing between and naught to mar the gladness
Of ever being, dear Lord, still, still with Thee.

WHY THE WORLD'S PEACE DELAYS.

IN spite of angels' songs to Bethlehem shepherds;
in spite of nineteen centuries of Christian civilization;
in spite of two centuries and a half of Quaker ideals;
in spite of successful arbitrations; in spite of Peace Conferences and Peace Congresses, we still have war, and we still wait and "stretch lame hands" for peace which does not come to abide in our world. Why, we ask, is it so slow and late in coming? Wise men everywhere see the folly and waste of war; good men realize now that it is barbaric and not Christian, and yet the leading nations of the world rush to arms, and settle their "cases" by brute force and red fury just as in the dawn before the light came.

It is not from lack of intelligence, and it is not because there is no better known way of settling differences. It is a lack, not of light, but of sweetness, to use Arnold's two words. Men progress faster in intelligence than they do in the spirit of love and sympathy and kindly feeling,—i.e., in sweetness,—and it is just these latter qualities of the heart which are destructive of war, and which are the eternal principle of peace. We cannot, therefore, be sure of peace—permanent peace—until we have men of good will, precisely as the angels sang.

Streams do not rise higher than their sources, nor does blessedness of any sort come in this world until the conditions on which it depends are fulfilled.
Neither congresses, nor legislatures, nor conferences can by decrees or resolutions establish a millennium for men who are still creatures of passion, and who are strangers to the spirit of love and sweetness, and alas! it is slow work making "men of good will," men who live in the principle of love!

In the last resort it narrows down to a personal, individual matter, for we cannot get nations of good will until we get men of good will. Take the ordinary individual, as, for instance, one's own self, and make a miniature study of the reason for war and the delay of peace. Somebody offends us, or misjudges us, or hinders our plans. We have, or we think we have,
"a case" against them, and war is declared on a small scale, for hate and bitterness are the seeds of war, whether in an individual or a nation. This sort of grudge and hostility between individuals is a present fact in almost every community, and it is, sad to say, a present fact in a multitude of religious congregations. The moment there is provocation, or even suspicion of it, war in a mild form is declared by the injured party, and all the elements which characterize real war, except the slaughter, are present.

Nations are only crowds of men. If men cannot be sweet with each other, and if they cannot live together in the principle of love, and if they cannot produce a state of peace by good will to each other, we cannot expect that peace between nations shall be established. When a nation is swept by a passion it will not be any more "rational" than a man is when he nurses his wrath, and so long as the bulk of men are aliens to the spirit of good will and patience under provocation we can never be sure of ultimate peace.

This does not mean that we are to cease our efforts to secure methods of arbitration, or, better still, a system of international courts, for every wise advance in that direction is sure to make it easier for peaceful methods to prevail, and to make war less necessary. But we must remember at the same time that we have no less a task on hand than that of producing a world of men who are of good will, and who live in the principle of love, if we would see peace cover the earth.

QUAKER LOYALTY.

THERE are two kinds of loyalty. One is based on tradition and superstition, the other is based on enlightened and intelligent faith. There is the man who pledges himself to his country, whether right or wrong, and there is the man who gives his life in a noble struggle to make his country right. The two kinds of loyalty are wide apart. One is low, the other is high; one is easy, the other is hard. We often complain that the old-time loyalty of Friends to their "Society" is dead, or at least feeble. The time was when a Friend's devotion to his "Society" was not a whit less than his devotion to his own family; often it was greater, as many an old record book will show. Friends did not question; they believed that they were God's people, and they counted not their lives dear in any service that held up the Ark. The children were made into Quakers from their babyhood, and it was almost as disgraceful for a Friend to fail to make good Friends of his children as it used to be for a Russian mother to outlive the loss of her sons. Few religious bodies have ever been more marked by loyalty than this one of which we are speaking. It is still a striking feature of the Roman Catholic Church. There, nearly every member attends the service, and practically every member gives to its support. Servant girls and day laborers give more than most rich Protestant Christians do, and the devotion to "the church" is of quite a different order from that which prevails in most religious denominations.

It will have to be confessed, we think, that there is not the same degree of loyalty among Friends to-day, with some exceptions, as existed once, and as still exists among the Roman Catholics. With this latter people loyalty is a habit, a custom; it is a part of their life and their religion. It is as unquestioning as a soldier's obedience to his superior officer. It was once so with Friends. A Quaker was different from any other Christian in the world. He had a special calling and a peculiar mission, and it became a Quaker's supreme business to live for that, and to see that the walls of his Zion were kept strong.

To-day this habit of loyalty does not exist. Children are not born loyal, nor do they suck denominational loyalty in with their mother's milk, as once. Our young people do not ask as their first question, what did, or does, father or mother believe, but they begin at once to question and test the worth and value and fitness of what is offered to them. A thing must prove its use to them. Their heart does not center on a thing until they feel quite sure there is a treasure there. The result is that we are not welded together into one mighty moving force, and fired with devotion to truths and principles which come to us with labels of unmistakable sanctity, but we are rather loosely held together, and our grasp on the principles is rather feeble and uncertain. So it seems to us.

Now what we need to-day is the building up of the higher type of loyalty. We do not expect, we hardly desire, the loyalty of tradition and habit. But we do wish to see our membership gain a clear and intelligent grasp and conception of the mighty truths of God which fundamental Quakerism embodies, and to see them line up around these truths, ready to do or die in loyal faith to express them and interpret them to the world. The loyalty we need now is not a blind devotion to custom, or even to the "Society," but a wise and high resolve to give our best to make these truths prevail, and to make the Quaker ideal a reality of life.

GENERAL CHURCH NEWS.

Archbishop Chappelle, apostolic delegate to the Philippine Islands, expects to sail from this country early in next month. Bishop Blenk, of San Juan, is also preparing to sail for his diocese in Porto Rico.

Superintendent Andrews has aroused considerable comment by his objection to the singing of Kipling's "Recessional" in the Chicago Public Schools, on the ground that it is "strongly theistic" in its teachings, and therefore violates the rule for the exclusion of religious teaching in the schools.

Regarding the salaries of Catholic priests, the New York "Herald" in a late article states that some priests obtain a salary of $2,000 a year, but the usual salary of a priest working in a city is $1,000, and in the country it rarely exceeds $800. The cases where higher salaries are paid are quite exceptional, it seems.

Fifty thousand Nestorian Christians, principally at Mossul, and in districts adjoining Persia, have recently been received into the Roman Catholic Church. In the region of Bagdad 30,000 Gregorian Armenians have also embraced Catholicism. The missionaries to whom these conversions are largely due are Fathers Rhetore and De France, of Van.

At a "church congress," recently held in London, an attack on ritualism was met by a storm of hisses and cries of "shame," the excitement running to a high pitch. The fervor of those who support ritualism is evidently quite as strong as that of the opposition who are waging war against the innovation and practice of new forms.

A new religious monthly, "The Northfield Echoes," is to be established at Northfield, Mass., as the official organ of Dwight L. Moody's work there and in Chicago. It will represent the Northfield Schools, the Bible Institute, the Summer Bible Schools, and the Northfield Extension Movement. The editor will be W. R. Moody.

Two humorists have just contributed their share to the exposure of Mrs. Eddy and her Christian Science movement. In the "Cosmopolitan Magazine" for this month Mark Twain indulges in the keenest and most convincing satire of a Christian Science "doctor." In the "Philistine," Elbert Hubbard discusses a challenge said to have been issued to the Christian Scientists by a Chicago physician.

The Board of Trustees of the Universalist General Convention, which has been holding its meetings in Boston, reports 1,003 parishes and 47,411 families, an increase of about 1,200 families. The church membership is 52,177; the Sunday-school membership, 59,179; the parish property, less debt, $9,623,672. There has been an increase of 64.5 per cent. in church membership and 18 per cent. in Sunday school membership since 1884. During the Conference an invitation was received from the Unitarian Association, also in session, to appoint a committee of five to confer with a committee of the same number of Unitarians for the purpose of considering plans for a closer co-operation of the two bodies. This invitation was accepted. This action does not look toward any organic union of the two churches, but means merely a closer co-operation in practical Christian work, and especially in missionary enterprises.

The branch of the Dutch Reformed Church (the State Church of the Transvaal) to which President Kruger belongs, is nicknamed Dopper. The members of this sect refuse to sing hymns, and confine themselves strictly to the psalms of David. President Kruger is an intensely religious man, but has narrow views on religious questions. He takes the Scriptures literally, and is said to have the lowest opinion of a man's intelligence if he tells him that the earth is round. He compares his burghers to the chosen people who are wandering in the desert under the especial direction of the Almighty.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

THE NEED OF A HOLY PLACE IN LIFE.

BY DAVID GREGG.*

Jesus says to each one of us, "Enter into thy closet!" That is, have a place in your life the atmosphere of which shall be so pure, and the surroundings so holy, that all things brought into it and analyzed in it shall be set forth in their true character, by their harmony or by their want of harmony with that place!

There is a wonderful power in a place. The play of the laws of association makes it a power. Bethel in the life of Jacob, the Burning Bush in the life of Moses, the Temple Court in the life of Isaiah, and the Damascus Road in the life of Paul, were places of power.

The Bible says that we can pack a place so full of life and reminiscences that the very beams and rafters of the place will speak to us, and act as voices helping us or hindering us, condemning and crushing us, or approving and inspiring us. The place in our home, in our store, in our shop, in our study where we kneel for self-converse and God-converse, becomes in the course of time, through use and by the necessity of things, a mighty spiritual power in our lives. Our plans may get twisted and warped elsewhere, but not here. Duty may seem indistinct elsewhere, but not here. The low and the mean may get into our thoughts and purposes elsewhere, but not here. The atmosphere of this place and all things connected with it become charged and surcharged with conscience and with God. The moment we step over its threshold we are at our best. Our faith is strongest, our spiritual vision clearest, our conscience keenest, our reason unclouded, and our love ready to make its greatest sacrifices. We are in the mood to take God's side and to come to God's conclusions. Is not such a place a need in our lives?

Whenever we use a place properly, that place at once becomes a help to us. Whenever we abuse a place, that place becomes a hindrance to us. We inflict our character upon the places in which we live. For example, a failure to do our duty renders the place where we fail distasteful and enervating. Let a student be idle in his study, and, by and by, every time he enters his study a reflex languor will come down upon him like stale smoke; and the very room will take its revenge upon him. But the student has it in his power to make his study a place of magnificent inspiration; to enter which means a new baptism of industry and success.

What we say of the study, we can say of the place of secret prayer, into which the Saviour bids us enter daily. We can so use it, so consecrate it, so keep it holy, so make it a part of our lives, so crowd it and recrowd it with the sublime and the spiritual, that the moment we enter it we shall feel ourselves filled with the spirit of supplication, swayed with aspirations for the high and noble, and able with comfort and perfect freedom to talk over everything pertaining to our life with God. I know of nothing more needed in our personal life than a Holy Place where we can meet God face to face, and where God can get into our thoughts, and into the deepest recesses of our hearts, and then out into our conversation and into our lives.

There are three blessed outcomes from having, and from rightly using, our Holy Place.

1. There will be a large entrance of God into our lives to live in us and to work through us.

God will come into our lives. Why? Because we have fulfilled the conditions which He requires and have put ourselves into right relations with Him. My fellow-men, do not expect the blessings unless you fulfil the conditions. God can do nothing for prayerlessness; but God can do everything for prayerfulness. Meet the conditions of being blessed. Be prayerful.

Meeting the conditions; that is everything. If the crystal would possess and give forth the prismatic colors—if it would beautify itself with rainbow hues—it must meet the conditions required of prisms. Take a rough piece of glass, hew and shape it, and the moment you have made it a prism, that moment the light striking through it will, by the very operation of the laws of nature, give you a revelation of beauty you never dreamt was in the sunbeam. Even so, let a man by secret prayer and communion hew himself into a religious prism, "which has reason, conscience and self-surrender to God for its three sides, and the instant that posture of total, irreversible, self-surrender is reached," God will flash through his human faculties the light of His glory, so that going about clothed with a holy and spiritual coat of many colors, he will be recognized by all who meet him as a favorite child of God.

2. There will be the distinct hearing of the voice of God on our part.

It is the voice of God that awakens conscience in man. An awakened conscience is what man perpetually needs. Without an awakened conscience he cannot search his motives. Now motives are the spring of life.

The noises of the world drown the voice of God. While on Broadway, New York, I have often heard the chimes of Trinity Church pour out their music at noonday. But I have noticed that very few of the busy crowds on the street followed the music. Too many sounds dispute with the chimes the possession of the ear. I have tried to follow the sacred song pealing through the air, but note after note was lost in the roar of the city, and in the noise and rattle of the wheels of commerce. The song was broken into a hundred unmeaning parts. There are hours, however, when the chimes in the Trinity steeple are heard in all their power and emphasis without a break. These are the midnight hours of solitude. There is no difficulty in hearing and enjoying the anthems on Christmas night, or on that night each year when the bells ring out the old year and ring in the new. While busy and active on the Broadway of the world God's words fall on our ears, but because of business and pleasure, they are heard only in a broken, fragmentary way; but in the secret closet, when pleasure and business are banished for the time, they fall in such a way that not a single syllable is lost.

3. We are kept constantly face to face with our highest ideals.

It is a good thing to come often into the presence of our best ideals and to canvass them. It results in self-excitation. It helps to inclose the plans of our life within the plans of God. It leads to self-mastery and to self-control. Mastership and self-control carry in them success. It leads to thinking, feeling, willing, working, in unison with the Infinite Will. It clarifies the intellect and warms the heart. It invigorates resolution and insures performance. It repels temptation and inspires goodness.

Here is a man about to enter upon the duties of the day! He has made his plans and is about to execute them. He is going to take advantage of the ignorance and weakness of his neighbor. He is going to wrong him both in estate and reputation—not in violation of the law, but in accordance with the law—i.e., according to its letter, not according to its spirit. The hour for secret devotion comes before he starts to business. He prays. He asks a blessing upon the day's duties and labors. He is now in the presence of the moralities of heaven; his own highest ideals stand out before him in celestial light. He hesitates. He pauses. Pray for hard heartedness and deceit? Pray for aid from the Father to wrong His child? Never. Never. The scheme is abandoned and the stain on the whiteness of his soul is bleached out by instant repentance. The transaction seen in the light of God's countenance, and in the sheen of one's own highest ideals, is changed from attractiveness to repulsiveness, from lawful barter to downright robbery.

"Among the elegant forms of insect life, there is a little creature, known to naturalists, which can gather around it a sufficiency of atmospheric air, and so clothed upon, descend into the bottom of the pool. You may see the little diver moving about dry, and at ease, protected by his crystal vesture, though the water all around him be stagnant and bitter. Secret prayer is such a protector, a transparent vesture which the world sees not, but a real defence, keeping out the corruption of the world from a man's soul. By means of it the believer can gather around him so much of heaven's atmosphere, that, while walking in the contaminating world for a season, he is safe from the world's pollution."

Perpetually clothed in a grand ideal! That is what we need, and it is at the Throne of Grace, during the season of secret daily prayer, that we robe ourselves anew in our grand ideal. This is what Christ did. Christ put on anew His grand ideal in the retirement of Gethsemane. Like Him we must frequently withdraw ourselves for prayer, and reclothe ourselves in our grand ideals.

THE DOUKHOBORS AND HOW THEY LIVE.

[Dr. William Saunders, director of the Agricultural Experiment Station, at Ottawa, has recently visited the Doukhobors, and he has given his impressions in the Ottawa "Citizen."]

THE DOUKHOBORS.

On the return journey a trip was taken up the Manitoba and Northwestern Railway from Portage la Prairie to Yorkton, and thence north by vehicle nearly one hundred miles to the north trail of the Swan River. Journeying then from Thunder Hill eastward for many miles the Swan was again forded and travel continued on the south trail until the Dauphin Railway was reached. During this drive of about 150 miles many villages of the Doukhobors were passed, and some time spent in inquiring into the progress they are making in their new settlements, in preparing for crops next season, and in providing shelter and food for the winter. Nearly all the able-bodied men were away from the village, working on the railways and assisting the settlers in their harvesting and threshing operations, thus earning money to buy supplies for winter; while some of the older men and boys, with the help of the strong and active women, were building houses and assisting in getting the land in order for crops next year. They are a very industrious people and are well satisfied with the country. Most of their land is of good quality and the locations they have chosen are partly wooded, affording abundant material for building operations and firewood. They are all vegetarians, and will not eat animal food, as they consider it a sin to kill. Most of them, however, will eat fish, and some of their villages are well located for food of this sort. They like butter, cheese and eggs, but, as yet, can get very little of these useful and concentrated foods, as their stock of cows is very small, giving them but a meagre supply of milk, and they have very few fowls. At present they are subsisting on bread from a low grade of flour, with soup made of a mixture of flour and water with the addition of vegetables, such as cabbage, onions and beets, and, in some instances, potatoes, of which they are very fond. In most of the villages they have grown a considerable quantity of vegetables, but not nearly enough for their requirements during the winter.

HOW THEY LIVE.

Their houses are substantially built of logs and roofed with poles, on which prairie sod about four inches thick is laid and the interstices filled with fine earth. The sides of the houses are well plastered on the exterior with clay, mixed with cut straw, and, sometimes, on the inside with the same material. The furniture in the houses is all of their own make, and consists of a few rough stools to sit on and higher benches which serve as tables. The beds are made of a series of poplar poles about six feet long and three or four inches in diameter, placed close together along one or both sides of the house, with the ends to the wall. On these some hay is placed, and over this a piece of thick felt. Most of the people recline on this structure with their heads to the wall, feet outwards, using such bedclothes as they can command. A few have feather beds and curtains and divide the sleeping places into compartments. Most of the houses consist of one large room for living, cooking, eating and sleeping. The aim is to have in all their villages a house for each family, and these houses are being erected at varying distances, in two rows, with a wide street between them. Although new houses are going up rapidly in every village, the absence of the men necessarily interferes with the progress of the work. In many of the villages each house is at present occupied by from ten to twenty people, and in some instances, in the larger dwellings, the inmates number from twenty-five to forty.

In these densely populated buildings the beds are arranged along each side of the house, in a double tier, the upper ones being reached by a ladder. In each house there is a Russian oven, similar to those used by the Mennonites in Manitoba, which serves for the warming of the building and cooking the food. Each village is provided with a steam bath-house, in which steam is generated by pouring water on heated stones. In this way profuse perspiration is brought about, and in the absence of towels the body is whisked briskly with a bunch of small branches of the mossy cup oak, the large leaves of which still hold tightly to the branches.

ARE CONTENTED.

These people seem very contented, and although in many instances conditions were met with which would, with us, be regarded as cases of hardship, not a word of complaint was heard from any of them. The Doukhobors are honest, truthful, and hard-working people, of cleanly habits, who use neither liquor nor tobacco. Being vegetarians, they are at present at a disadvantage as compared with other settlers, as there is much game about their settlements, with which they could easily supplement their vegetable diet with great advantage. They appear, however, to be very strong and hardy, and will no doubt prove a very useful class of people in the districts in which they are settled. They will soon form prosperous communities and assist much in the development of the country. They may, however, need some assistance for a time, until they can produce enough from their land to sustain them.

It is often said in commendation of a man that "he knows a good thing when he sees it." The application is to appreciations of various sorts, but more often to material than to spiritual things. It were well to cultivate this ability to recognize that which is morally or spiritually good for us. Disappointment, defeat, disaster,—do we know the good things in them when we see them? The disaster, defeat, disappointment, we can see easily enough; but do we take pains to clutch at the good in them as we clutch at the income which we call success and triumph? "I have loved you, saith the Lord. Yet ye say, Wherein hast thou loved us?"—"Sunday School Times."

BENJAMIN SEEBOHM AND EARLY QUAKERISM.

McMinnville, Oregon.

My Dear Friend, Rufus M. Jones:

I send with this a copy of some of Benjamin Seebohm's editorial statements as found in Stephen Grellet's journal.

It was my great privilege when a young man to become acquainted with this honored servant of God when he was in this country, and spent very happy hours with him in England. He was one of the greatest doctrinal ministers and writers of his generation, and had many seals to his ministry. He was peculiarly gifted in helping thinking and troubled young men, and many of that class were saved from going into the speculations of that day.

I would kindly ask thee to have this extract published soon in THE AMERICAN FRIEND. Thy friend,

JOHN HENRY DOUGLAS.

Calmly looking back on the characteristics of early Quakerism as it regards the comprehensiveness of its Christian principles, the completeness of its standard of Christian practice, and the spirit of its Christian discipline, and viewing them in connection with the universal church of professing Christendom, it appears to be a simple historical fact that wherever, in any direction, there has been real progress—any onward movement—it has been toward the position occupied by the early Friends—George Fox and his associates. It is not needful to particularize; the thoughtful and intelligent reader will be able, at a glance, to fix his eyes upon various points of Christian principle and practice, which illustrates what has been said.

In taking this estimate of the early Friends and their sphere of usefulness, it would not be serving the cause of truth to attribute to them a freedom from human infirmity to which they themselves laid no claim; and in justly appreciating their worth it is well to bear in mind that they were fallible men of like passions as we are, liable to be biased in judgment, and influenced in their actions by the difficult times in which they lived. They did not seek, but rather avoided, the use of terms of scholastic theology; yet as Christian men, under a strong sense of their accountability to God, they did not hesitate plainly and honestly to declare their religious belief. They did not leave the world in doubt as to their Christian standpoint; and a careful and candid perusal of their writings and biographies will afford incontrovertible evidence that they were thoroughly sound in the fundamental doctrines of the gospel. They had no new gospel to proclaim. In common with other orthodox professors of the Christian name, they most fully recognized the Divine inspiration and authority of the Holy Scriptures, and thoroughly believed in all that is revealed therein concerning the unity of the Godhead—the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost—one God over all, blessed forever; they unhesitatingly held the utter depravity of human nature in consequence of the fall; the pre-existence and incarnation of the Son of God; the proper eternal Deity, and the real manhood of the Lord Jesus Christ; the need and efficacy of his propitiatory sacrifice as an atonement or expiation for the sins of mankind; his mediatorial intercession and reign; the forgiveness and reconciliation of the repenting sinner through faith in Him alone; the work of the Holy Spirit in the conversion of the sinner, and in the preservation, guidance and sanctification of the believer in Jesus; the immortality of the soul; the resurrection and the final judgment of the world by our Lord Jesus Christ; the eternal blessedness of the righteous, and the eternal punishment of the wicked.

In reference to these things, William Penn, in the full maturity of his judgment and the brightest period of his Christian experience, had explicitly declared: "Where we are vulgarly apprehended to differ most we dissent least—I mean in doctrine. For except it be the wording of some of the articles of faith in school terms, there are very few of those professed by the 'Church of England' to which we do not heartily assent. I say, then, that where we are supposed to differ most, we differ least. It is generally thought that we do not hold the common doctrines of Christianity, but have introduced new and erroneous ones in lieu thereof; whereas we plainly and entirely believe in the creed commonly called the 'Apostles' Creed,' which is very comprehensive as well as ancient. If keeping to the terms of Scripture be a fault, thanks be to God that only is our creed, and with good reason, too; since it is fit that that only should conclude, and be the creed of Christians which the Holy Ghost could only propose and require us to believe."

CURRENT TOPICS.

J. Campbell Morgan concluded his recent evangelistic tour in the United States with six days' meetings in New York city, including three days in the borough of Brooklyn, and sailed for England last week. It was the privilege of the writer to hear him several times, much to his own profit. Four of his six sermons to professing Christians in Brooklyn were on the "Will of God," and immense congregations listened with deepest interest to this series of Scriptural expositions on the revelation of the will of God, its reasonableness, its practicability, and the power to obey it. Two other sermons on the function and force of witness bearing were a trumpet call for the church to come back to the apostolic practice of "every believer a witness for God, based on the text, 'And we are his witnesses of these things; so also is the Holy Ghost,' " etc. It may be frankly said that Dr. Morgan does not see truth from just the angle of vision that some of us perhaps consider the correct one. Our theories of the absolute eradication of sin as a second work of grace are not accepted by him, and our terminology as to the work of the Holy Spirit differs in some particulars from his. But are these the things by which we are to measure a man? Is there not some deeper underlying truth of spiritual life and evidence of fellowship with God pervading a man's ministry that is its own proof of his call of God and right to speak for him? It seems to me that no one can hear Dr. Morgan without feeling that he has been taught much from God, and we gladly rejoice in his ministry among us.

D. L. Moody was present at some of the meetings, and continued the series in Brooklyn for four days, addressing Christians only, except on Sabbath evening, at the Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church, when he spoke to the unsaved with great power and it was estimated that about one hundred and fifty sought Christ in the after-meeting. Commenting on the cry for new methods in preaching and new forms of truth, D. L. Moody declared repeatedly that in all his ministry he had never seen men so ready to accept Christ as now. "Twenty years ago," he said, "I used to often preach ten days or more before I had any need for an inquiry room; now men flock into the inquiry room by hundreds at the first service. There is a hush over congregations wherever I have gone of late that makes me feel sure that we are on the eve of the greatest revival we have ever known." This is something for men to think over who have been saying that even Moody doesn't move men as he once did, but it is even more suggestive as a judgment of our own times by a man of very wide experience.

Meanwhile, here in Brooklyn, the City of Churches, there is a general lament over the vast multitudes of our non-catholic population who never attend church services. House to house canvassing in the best parts of the city reveal the fact that one-half the people never attend church. In one of the poorer sections of the city it has been found that only one-fourth are non-attenders, thus showing that, as it has always been, society is "dying at the top." But it is doubtless true that the fact that church-going is no longer a mark of good breeding or a social function, has much to do with this declension. We may safely infer that those who do go represent a more earnest type of piety than the congregations of a past age.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

WHEN DOES THE NINETEENTH CENTURY END?

I am surprised at a number of persons whom I meet who are counting upon the current year as the last year of this century. It seems to me that a little reflection should satisfy them of their error. Certainly not one of them would consent to accept ninety-nine cents for a dollar, and why count ninety-nine years as a century. They would not reckon 1899 cents to stand for 19 dollars, and why claim that 1899 years should count as 19 centuries? The addition of one cent in one instance is not more necessary than the addition of one year in the other.

Another illustration: A young man is not nineteen years old when he enters upon his 19th year. He is not 19 until the year is completed.

Again: We write the date Tenth month twenty-seventh, 1899. We do not mean 1899 years, ten months and twenty-seven days, but we mean the 27th day of the Tenth month of the year 1899, or in other words, that there has passed 1898 years, ten months and twenty-seven days counting from the beginning of the Christian era.

It therefore seems to me very clear that the year 1900 is necessary to complete the 19th century, and that we shall not enter upon the 20th century until the 1st of January, 1901.

The International Lesson.

FOURTH QUARTER.

Lesson VIII.

Eleventh Month 19, 1899.

PUBLIC READING OF THE SCRIPTURES.

Neh. 8: 1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The ears of all the people were attentive unto the book of the law. Neh. 8: 3.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Eleventh mo. 13.—Public reading of the Scriptures. Neh. 8: 1-12.

Third-day, Eleventh mo. 14.—Obeying the law. Neh. 8: 13-9: 3.

Fourth-day, Eleventh mo. 15.—God's commandments to be studied.

Deut. 11: 13-21.

Fifth-day, Eleventh mo. 16.—Delight in the word. Psalms 119: 1-16.

Sixth-day, Eleventh mo. 17.—The Scriptures believed. 2 Kings 22: 3-13.

Seventh-day, Eleventh mo. 18.—The law rejected. Jer. 36: 9-24.

First-day, Eleventh mo. 19.—Reward in keeping. Psalms 19: 7-14.

Nehemiah, chapters 8-10, differs from other parts of the book in that Nehemiah is there spoken of in the third person; whereas in all parts he speaks in the first person. Ezra appears in chapter 8 for the first time, and takes the most prominent place. Why Ezra is not mentioned before is not explained. Some think that he had gone back to Babylon, and returned when Nehemiah had finished the walls; others that Ezra was discouraged and kept in the background until Nehemiah's work of rebuilding the walls was finished. Whichever view is correct, it is clear that Ezra now takes the first place, and promulgates the law. It is very evident from the lesson and what follows that the people were unacquainted with the law. The effect of learning its provisions produced an effect upon the people which was apparently unlooked for by Ezra. "Whenever the law was shaped as we now know it, it is clear that it was not practised in its present form by the Jews before Ezra's day." What hand Ezra had in shaping it cannot be said; he did publish it, and after his day it took a far more important place in the Jewish community than ever before. It was with Ezra that Judaism proper began.

The time of the present lesson was September, 444 B.C. The section really begins with the last sentence of the 7th chapter, "And when the seventh month came," etc.

1. "All the people." All classes, not only from Jerusalem, but also from the country round about. "Street that was before the water gate." "Broad place," etc. (Revised Version.) This was the open place inside the gate. This gate was on the eastern side of the city. See 12: 37. "They spake." This implies that the whole community joined in the request. "The book." This shows that the people knew of the existence of a book, even if they were not familiar with its contents. It has been suggested that their knowledge was like that of the Romans respecting the Sybilline Books; they knew of them, but not their contents. In this case the priests may have kept the contents of the law secret. But Ezra was to make the law public. "Men and women." The Jews always treated women with much more consideration than did other nations. "Hear with understanding." All who were old enough to understand. Compare 10: 28.

3. "Before the broad place." (Revised Version.)

He stood at one side, and looked probably toward the east. "From the morning until midday." Early morning about daylight, until the heat of midday obliged them to stop. It does not appear to have been consecutive reading. It was interrupted by explanations (see verses 7, 9); Ezra was probably relieved by those who stood by him.

4. "Pulpit." Literally, tower. "Of wood which they had made for the purpose." This implied that it was a temporary platform erected for this special occasion. "Beside him stood," etc. It is to be noted that none are named as being priests; names are given as of individuals or Levites. It would therefore seem likely that, as a whole, the priests did not support God's movement, though they are mentioned in verse 13. It might have been expected that the High Priest would have taken part in the proceedings, but his name does not occur.

5. "Opened." Unrolled the scroll. Compare Luke 4: 17. The writing was in vertical columns across the parchment, and was read from right to left; that is, the reverse of the English method. "Above all the people." Raised above them on his platform. "Stood up." To show their respect for the law. It is hardly to be supposed that they stood up the six or seven hours the reading occupied.

6. "Blessed." Gave thanks. "Amen." So let it be; thus signifying their assent to what had been said. "Lifting up their hands." Compare Psalm 134: 2.

7. Of the thirteen names given in this verse four are found in chapter 9: 5 among the Levites; and seven among the Levites mentioned in chapter 10: 9-14. The others do not occur elsewhere. "And." It is likely that this word should be translated "even." "Caused . . . to understand." Explained.

8. "And they read," etc. (Revised Version.) It is not clear whether the reading by the Levites was going on at the same time as that by Ezra or his assistants, or whether the reference is to Ezra himself or the one reading. The latter seems the better explanation. As is well known this verse has often been taken as a definition of what good reading aloud should be. The rendering in the Revised Version is probably the most accurate. "And they read in the book, in the law of God, distinctly; and they gave the sense, so that they understood the reading."

9. "Tirshatha." The Persian title for a local or provincial governor. Compare Ezra 2: 63, where it is applied to Zerubbabel. Nehemiah calls himself "Pekah" (5: 14, 15, 19). This appears to be a Babylonish title with the same meaning. "This day is holy unto the Lord." It was the day of the new moon, and the day when the law was read to them. The feast of trumpets was afterwards observed on this day. As the law was at this time unknown to the people, it is hardly likely that Lev. 23: 24 was referred to. "Mourn not." It was not fitting to mourn on feast days and days of rejoicing. "Wept." Because, as the reading went on, the people saw how they had violated the law. Compare 2 Kings 22: 11.

10. "He." We are not told who. Doubtless Ezra or Nehemiah; probably Ezra. "Send portions."

They should remember the poor and needy. Compare Esther 9: 19. "Joy of the Lord." Israel's joy in her God. Not the joy of the Lord over Israel. Compare Psalm 38: 39.

12. Because they had understood the words that were declared unto them. They rejoiced because they now understood the law.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. Correct understanding of Scripture is greatly to be desired.
2. No book has influenced the world like the Bible.
3. "Rejoice in the Lord."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR ELEVENTH MONTH NINETEENTH.

LIBERTY AND LOVE.

Romans 14: 1-23.

(A temperance meeting.)

Second-day, Eleventh mo. 13.—His servants whom ye obey. Rom. 6: 15-23
Third-day, Eleventh mo. 14.—Walking at liberty. Psalms 119: 41-48.
Fourth-day, Eleventh mo. 15.—Liberty a stumbling-block. 1 Cor. 8: 1-13.
Fifth-day, Eleventh mo. 16.—Thy neighbor as thyself. Matt. 22: 34-40.
Sixth-day, Eleventh mo. 17.—The profit of many. 1 Cor. 10: 25-33.
Seventh-day, Eleventh mo. 18.—Servants through love. Gal. 5: 13-15.

It is well to say at the outset that the fourteenth chapter of Romans does not discuss the use or disuse of meat and drink because of any evil effect they may have upon the human system, physically, mentally or morally. There is nothing wrong in the meat Paul writes about; the whole question turns on the use that has been made of that meat by offering it to idols, with perhaps a reference also to the Jewish law about eating and drinking. The question of the use or disuse of intoxicants involves another factor, which is the chief one—that is their effect in themselves upon the whole nature of man. So what Paul says about the "weak" who cannot eat or drink certain things is wide of the mark when applied to the use of intoxicants, since it is the weak who do eat and drink and the strong who abstain.

Nevertheless the chapter incidentally states certain principles of great value as a temperance lesson.

First, there is the definition of true liberty. "Personal liberty" is a popular phrase with a large portion of our population, and it is worth our while to ascertain just how Paul defined it. The phrase, "Unto the Lord," repeated several times in the first part of the chapter is the first element of the definition. Liberty is not license, but is absolute submission to highest possible law. The first great question in every action is, whether I can do this "unto the Lord" with an eye single to His glory and a conscience true to His will. It is necessary, indeed, to know all I can of that will and to have a conscience fully enlightened as to duty in every respect, but it is of vastly more importance to be immovably settled in the principle of obedience "unto the Lord." Imperfect knowledge coupled with absolute obedience is immeasurably better than absolute knowledge with imperfect obedience.

The second part of the definition of liberty is found in the fifteenth verse, "Thou walkest no longer in love." Then liberty is not exemption from relationship to my brethren; on the contrary, it is obligation to them. If liberty is obedience to highest law, then it is also highest service for others, which is the service of love. Here is the immutable principle underlying the doctrine of total abstinence from intoxicants. It is not the only reason why I should abstain, for the use of liquor may fatally injure me personally, but even if it does not I am sure it is the great curse of millions of my fellow-beings; it is an insatiable appetite; it is a hereditary taint; it is taught them by example, and they dare not touch it without awakening uncontrollable forces of evil within them. The law of love demands abstinence on our part from any indulgence that would thus prove a stumbling-block to others.

Verse 17 emphatically declares that the kingdom of God is not personal liberty, but first, conformity to a divine standard; then peaceable relationship to brethren, and lastly the joy of the Holy Ghost instead of the joy of a savory piece of meat, or a favorite drink that may please my personal appetite. Verse 21 is a statement for all time of the Christian use of our example. The principle is of far-reaching application.

BY LEVI D. JOHNSON, M.D.

The remarks which I shall make to-day will not have the finish which many of the addresses and papers which have preceded mine have had, as the most of what I will have to say has been suggested to my mind as I have been riding along the road in my rounds of visiting patients. However, I am firmly convinced that if you will give me your prayerful attention, He, the Spirit of Truth, will help me to say that which will be helpful to you, and through you be the means of strength to the mission work.

Permit me to call your attention to the words of Christ to His disciples as recorded in Luke 24: 45-50, and Acts 1: 8: "Then opened he their understanding that they might understand the Scriptures." Oh, that our understanding may be opened, illuminated, to-day, so that we may see the possibilities of the work when Spirit filled as we have never seen it before.

"And said unto them, Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day; and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem. And ye are witnesses of these things. And behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you; but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high."

Here was the greatest and grandest commission ever given to men. It was definite and explicit enough for them to know how to begin to carry it out, while the details of its execution were to be received from Him who was to come and endue or invest or clothe them with knowledge or power.

The early church, the disciples and immediate followers of Christ, were a band of missionaries. At first they comprehended only the idea of home missionary work, but soon the Holy Spirit led them into foreign fields.

Whatever instructions were given them for guidance in work may safely be received and followed by missionaries of the cross to-day. The command to "tarry until endued" was just as imperative as the command to "go."

There was much more importance attached to the necessity of "tarrying until endued" than they realized when the command was given. There were things to be accomplished in them as well as for them, which they could not realize even the necessity of at that time.

It meant for them the cleansing of their hearts from all evil. It meant the eradication of selfishness and self-love, which had so characterized their lives up to the present. It was necessary for the successful accomplishment of the work which had been assigned them that they should get into the place in which they were truly willing to be "servant of all," instead of wanting the chief seats.

In order to win the world for Christ there must be great humility of spirit; the humility of Christ should possess them, and this could only be as they were crucified to self and filled with the Holy Ghost whom He was to send in His name. His life in all its fulness must pervade their very being.

They needed this filling in order that they might have the perfect faith in Christ and in the ultimate success of their mission, which would be necessary for their perseverance in the work.

This and this only could give them the courage which it was necessary for them to have. They would meet with unnumbered and unthought of obstacles and persecutions. The words of Christ were, "If they have persecuted me, they will also persecute you."

Behold the wondrous change in Peter. Before this he had been impulsive, was vacillating and cowardly. After the filling we read: "Peter, standing up with the eleven, lifted up his voice and spake forth." No fear of servant maids now. Can this be the same man who "began to curse and swear?"

Yes, the very same, and yet not the same, for the filling of the Spirit had changed that cowardly, shrinking Peter into a bold, courageous, lion-hearted Christian, so that he could stand before the surging multitude who had clamored for the crucifixion of Christ, and without a tremor charge home upon them the awful crime—"Him ye did crucify and slay."

*Address delivered before Friends' Missionary Conference, Whittier, Cal.

In Acts 4: 13 we read: "When they saw the boldness (courage) of Peter and John they marveled, and took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus." No wonder they marveled. We have been in the habit of hearing of Peter only as cowardly, and denying his Master, but the record states, "They all forsook him and fled"—John just as cowardly as Peter. The same men who had previously witnessed their cowardice were now witnesses of their courage and loyalty.

After their imprisonment and liberation, with the command from the rulers not to preach these doctrines any more, they "spoke the word of God with boldness." They said: "We must obey God rather than men," and although they were "beaten" for it, they "departed rejoicing" and "ceased not to teach."

They had an experience which enabled them to say, "I am ready not to be bound only, but also to die for the name of the Lord Jesus." They were courage-filled because spirit-filled.

Another important result of being filled with the Spirit was then and will be now—the masses are reached by the power of God. See how this company of Spirit-baptized missionaries reached the people, and the blessed results. The immense congregations were not amused or entertained, but they were convicted, converted, saved, turned to the Lord. The result of the first day's work was about three thousand souls. The next the number of the men (and probably twice as many women and children) was about five thousand. At the next place we read, "That there were added to the Lord multitudes of both men and women."

Another prominent result of being filled with the Spirit was, they brought forth the fruit of the Spirit, Love, joy, peace, etc. In the primitive church the men and women were filled with the Holy Ghost; that was the rule; now alas, it has come to be the exception.

The filling of the Spirit gave them a holy enthusiasm which gave them a divine push in the work. This is greatly needed in all missionary enterprises.

When I visited the Scotch Presbyterian missions, on the old Calabar River, Africa, the superintendent gave me this bit of history. For several years the work had apparently been at a standstill. The natives were not interested and were unreached. A young lady in Scotland, who had been reared by worldly and wealthy parents, was converted. She heard the voice of God calling her to foreign fields. Her parents objected. She went on with her studies in college and graduated with high honors. She took a post graduate course and was a fine musician. After all this was accomplished her friends said, "Now, what do you expect to do?" She replied, "Do just what I have been preparing for, and what God has called me to do—go as a missionary to Africa." She was soon on her long journey, the only lady passenger on the ship. She arrived at the mission station on Wednesday afternoon and immediately reported "for duty." She was informed that she could not do anything until she had mastered the language, which would take from one to two years. She said, "I can't wait; I must be gathering souls." Addressing the matron, she said, "Can you not, between now and Sunday, teach me to say in the native language, How do you do; I am glad to see you; won't you come to church up on the hill to-morrow." She set about it to learn her little speech, and Saturday afternoon started out on her first missionary work. She offered her hand to everybody she met; gave the invitation to scores, and the result was that the church the next day would not hold the people who came.

People were convicted and converted. From that day the mission took on new life and Christian activities. Miss Hogg was filled with the Spirit and had the divine push.

Things do not always work out as we have planned, but to Spirit-filled workers there never come any disappointments. If they do not realize what they had expected, something better is received in its place. Paul thought it right to preach the Gospel in Bithynia, but the Spirit suffered him not, and the Macedonian cry came.

I believe we have no conception of the vastness and glory of the results if the church at home and her missionaries abroad were filled with the Spirit. Have you caught the thought that to be filled with the Spirit is to be filled with God? God again incarnate, not in the person of Jesus Christ, and in the body of flesh created holy, by the Holy Ghost, but manifest in the flesh by the Holy Ghost dwelling in the bodies of sinners saved by grace.

It is God's plan for a redeemed humanity to save a lost humanity. Every sinner coming in contact with a person filled with the Spirit is brought in touch with the Almighty. In such an one the sinner sees the love, the patience, the gentleness, the kindness, the joy of God manifested through the flesh. Beloved, have we been representing God that way? Oh, for a Spirit-baptized church. Any church or mission station thus filled will be successful. If we expect the highest order of success in our work, we must not depend upon any other power or agency. I speak of this here because to a very large extent, like home worker, like missionary. That is, if he or she who is to go into the mission field has been educated at home to depend upon certain things to draw to the church, to reach the masses, they will be very likely to depend upon the same things in their new work.

Have you ever considered and answered the question, "What are the drawing cards in the churches to-day?" I have been in many ministerial associations, workers' conventions, etc., and have heard the subject repeatedly discussed, "How Shall we Reach the Masses?" What are the methods now employed? It would be a shame even to mention some of them. Among the more common are a pipe organ, with a choir of finely trained voices, many times the persons constituting it being entirely irreligious—operatic solos, sung in such a manner that however good the hymn may be, not a word can be understood by the congregation; church entertainments and so-called socials, which are entirely of a worldly character. Must I add preaching of a sensational character, often speaking upon topics of the day, without even referring to the Gospel as the prime factor in settling all these ills. How does all this correspond with the plain instructions given by Christ, the Head of the church, as to the methods to be employed to draw the masses.

"And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me." "Tarry ye, until ye be endued with power from on high." Endued with power for what? Power, ability, to present Christ to the world as its needed Saviour. Then the responsibility will be transferred to him to draw. He has not commanded the church to draw, but to present Him, exalt Him, and He will exert the drawing power. "He is altogether lovely."

Have you, as members of the Religious Society of Friends, considered why, twenty years ago, and for a long period previous to that, when the meetings were held in silence very largely, when there was no singing, no young people's societies, or any of the modern appliances now so freely used to draw and to hold the people—why, during that period as a society you were held together and you held your young people even better than now? I believe the answer is easily given. They constantly honored the Holy Spirit. It was understood that no one would stand up to speak unless he or she believed that the Holy Spirit wanted them to do so, and they delivered the message which they believed He desired to send to the people through them. The effect of this is easily to be seen: Those who attended the meetings and heard what was said received it as the voice of God to them.

I am sure you do not understand me as meaning that all their methods were the best, and that there was no room for improvement; but I do wish to emphasize the thought that they honored the Holy Spirit, and because they did so He honored them.

The early Methodists did not depend on pipe organs and solos and choruses and church entertainments to draw the people, but upon the faithful presentation of Jesus Christ as one who was able to save from all sin, and the faithful testimony of witnesses filled with the Holy Ghost. Hungry people do not go to a music or millinery store to get a meal to satisfy their hunger; the most simple restaurant would suit them much better.

Do not understand me as believing that none of the above things should be used, but our reliance should be in the personal, present Holy Spirit, and all these other things used only as He shall direct.

There is a wonderful power in song inspired and thrilled with the Holy Ghost, but saloons can and do many times furnish as good as the churches unless Spirit filled.

How different the results of church music if the singers all sung for "Jesus only." For four years I was pastor of a church where my organist lived some distance from me, and I left the selection of the hymns entirely to her. It was very apparent to many that the hymns were always very appropriate to the theme of the sermon. One day, in which "the glory of the Lord filled the house," after the services I said to her: "Sister Briggs, the Lord certainly helps you in the selection of your hymns." To which she replied: "I know He does. I begin Monday morning to pray about my hymns for the next Sabbath, and then after selecting several I pray to be helped to select just the right ones, and I can nearly always tell just about what subject you will preach on from the character of the hymns He helps me to select."

Is there anything strange or inconsistent about that? I think not. I would not dare to stand before a congregation to preach without having the assurance that the Lord had given me the message. He knows who will be there, and at what place of worship I will be. After making it a subject of prayer, and being settled in my mind that the Holy Spirit would have me to speak the next Sabbath upon a certain subject, I never change from that under any circumstances. The congregation may not be what I had expected, or providences may be such that I will speak in an entirely different place than I had anticipated; but that matters not, because I know that He knew all the time whom I was to address, and it is His message, and I deliver it fully expecting it will reach the hearts for whom He intended it.

Before closing these remarks, I want to call your attention again to the matter of church music. I give it as a kindly warning. Sometimes when I have been permitted to attend your meetings for worship there has a fear come upon me that you might be trying too largely to pattern after "the nations around you." I beseech of you to be careful and not become formal in the matter of singing. Do not allow the number of hymns sung by the congregation and the solos to occupy the time which should have been used under the leadership of the Holy Spirit in personal testimony or exhortation. It may all be summed up in this. Let the Holy Spirit lead in all things—preaching, prayer, testimony, song and silence, if He desires it, and then all your meetings will be held in life and power. The practical application of all this is, Are we willing to take it God's way? Will we tarry for the endowment, and be led by Him in all things?

Oh, for an utter abandonment unto God.

In his "Kinship of Souls" Reuben Thomas teaches a great lesson against denominationalism—a lesson for Christ against division. He illustrates this by the conversion of a young divinity student from the narrowest kind of sectarianism to the broadest conception of Christianity. The student is forced to think things out for himself, to form his own opinions on every item of the Christian faith, to form that religion which he works out on the learning he has acquired, to take the best from every conception of truth which has been brought before the world, and to build upon that greatest of all conceptions which is found in the New Testament. The great aim of the book is brought about after many wanderings of the hero through Europe. These travels and the comments on them are wearisome, but the end of the book repays us for wading through the questions with which the book is strewn.

News from the Field.

At the New York Monthly Meeting, held 1st inst., Micajah M. Binford was granted a minute to attend Baltimore Yearly Meeting. Attention was called to the importance of maintaining our testimony against oaths. A case was cited in which a paper to which an affirmation had been made, intended for use in a court in Texas, was returned with information that an affirmation has no legal status in that state, and could not be accepted. In another case a Friend, who was called to testify before a State Commission in New York, offered to take an affirmation, but the chairman was unable to administer it, being apparently unfamiliar with this substitute for a judicial oath.

The cause of the suffering Doukhobors in the Canadian provinces was earnestly pleaded, and much interest manifested by the meeting.

Southland College, which is under the management of Indiana Yearly Meeting, has sustained a loss in the recent death of Stanley A. Pearson, who has for two years been its president. He was devoted to the work, and had left his chosen profession—the law—to take up this work.

Francis T. White, of New York city, whose portrait is given above, has twice given liberally to Earlham College, and his letter to Indiana Yearly Meeting this year, giving the College $25,000, has already been commented upon in these columns.

John Henry Douglas is once more at his home in McMinnville, Oregon, after an active summer of evangelistic work in the Central States, largely in Indiana, in the limits of Western Yearly Meeting. We have received an interesting letter from him, the following extract of which we print, as it is of general interest to our readers:

"I am just home from a very interesting visit of five months, in Indiana mostly. My health has enabled me through grace to go through with all I had before me. I was able to speak on an average of five times a week.

"I found an open door and a warm welcome everywhere. I attended Wilmington, Western and Indiana Yearly Meetings. I found almost everywhere a great hungering for the truth as it is in Jesus. Many who were trying to satisfy themselves, by accepting speculative theories of religion, have found themselves famishing spiritually, and are humbling themselves as little children, and are opening their hearts to the simple truth as it is in Jesus applied by the blessed Holy Spirit. It is very encouraging to see the great mass of our people settling down with unbounded faith in the Word of God. Under the full glory of the Cross and Pentecost all speculation and doubts vanish. The only sure protection for the intellect is, 'The helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God.'

"In many ways it has been one of the most interesting services of my life. It afforded me very great pleasure to revisit several places where I had labored twenty-five, thirty, thirty-five and forty years ago. I found nearly all the converts of thirty years ago, and the churches organized then flourishing now, though many have gone above. I rejoice greatly in the missionary spirit which is increasing nearly everywhere. What a blessed change on all lines of church work—forty years ago no missions; now missions in some fourteen countries and one hundred and seventy-five missionaries. 'What hath God wrought,' praise His name.

Thy brother,

"J. H. DOUGLAS."

IOWA YEARLY MEETING.

The educational conference of Bangor and Honey Creek Quarterly Meetings met at Stanford, Tenth month 27th and 28th. The evening of the 27th was occupied by President Rosenberger, of Penn College, who lectured on "The Childrens' Crusade." The next day the following topics were introduced and discussed: "The Proper Attitude of Schools toward Reforms," "Is there a Place for the Bible in Our Academies? In the Common Schools?" "What Influenced Me to Strive for Higher Education." J. R. Howard, of New Providence, and C. V. Marshall, of Stanford, debated the question, "Resolved, That the study of language furnishes a better mental drill than the study of mathematics." The conference was well attended by visitors and Stanford Friends. Some of those taking a prominent part in the discussions were Prof. E. H. Gifford, of Penn College; A. J. Hanson, of Bangor; Harry Hayes, of Marshalltown; Ella Naylor, of LeGrand; Anna Pickrell, of New Providence; Etta Mendenhall, of Marshalltown; J. W. Marshall and Anna W. Marshall, of Stanford. W. Bunch, a Methodist minister from Union, also joined in the exercises. Devotions were conducted by A. J. Hanson and Malinda Hunt. A resolution was unanimously adopted, addressed to the Boards of LeGrand and New Providence Academies, recommending them to add a course in Bible study to their courses of study.

This brief report can give no adequate idea of the proceedings of the conference, which is regarded as a very successful meeting. It is believed that an interest in higher education was aroused or increased in the minds of many. The large number of young people in the audience, some of them students of New Providence Academy, proved a source of much encouragement to the speakers. Officers for the next term were elected as follows: President, Mary H. Lewis, Albion; vice-president, John H. Hadley, New Providence; secretary, Stella Pemberton, Marshalltown.

MARY H. LEWIS.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING.

Kokomo Quarterly Meeting, which is reported below by Jesse T. Turner, is one of the largest quarterly meetings of Western Yearly Meeting. It has a membership of 1,540, with 17 ministers. Kokomo itself is on the line of railroad between Chicago and Indianapolis.

Kokomo Quarterly Meeting was held at Hazel Dell, near Windfall, in Tipton County, Indiana, Tenth month, 26th to 28th, and in future will be held at that place in the Tenth month each year, and notwithstanding the somewhat scattered condition of the six monthly meetings, and the continuous rain from Fifty-day evening until after nine o'clock Seventh-day evening, all the sessions were well attended, except that of Sixth-day evening, which, on account of the steady downpour of rain, was small, but quite favored under the ministry of David Hadley. The members of Hazel Dell Monthly Meeting being all comparatively new, and some of them never before having attended a quarterly meeting, greatly appreciated the privilege, and were most kind and hospitable in their reception and entertainment of Friends from other monthly meetings. Hazel Dell meeting is two miles from the station at Windfall, but those going by rail were kindly conveyed from and to the station, and between the church and their hospitable homes over distances ranging from a half mile to two miles.

Visiting ministers present were Mary Hill, from Ohio Yearly Meeting; Amos M. Kenworthy, Indiana Yearly Meeting, and David Hadley, general superintendent of evangelistic work in Western Yearly Meeting, all of whom took acceptable part in the ministry of the Word, and the presence of power of the Holy Spirit was manifest in all the sessions, and souls were blessed both in the meetings and in homes where ministers and others were entertained. David Hadley preached at Curtisville on First-day night, and at Courtland Avenue Church, in Kokomo, on Second-day night. A. M. Kenworthy and Mary Hill remained at Hazel Dell over First-day and First-day night. The former filled an appointment at New Hope at ten o'clock a.m. on Second-day, and at the First Church, Union Street, Kokomo, at 7.30 p.m., same day, and will visit families for a few days, and conduct public service at night as the Holy Spirit may lead. Mary Hill will remain in the limits of the quarterly meeting for a few days, and visit some of the meetings in the interest of foreign missions. The quarterly meeting endorsed a minute of New Hope Monthly Meeting, liberating James A. Ellis for religious service in the limits of Western and Indiana Yearly Meetings. His wife, Mary Ellis, an elder, will join him in a part or all of the service.

Dr. Sylvester Newlin has been retained as pastor of Kokomo Union Street meeting for another year, commencing Ninth month 1st, and the meeting is prospering under his very efficient pastoral care. Truly may and do we sing, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

JESSE T. TURNER.

The following is a report taken from the minutes of the fourth conference on department church work of Kokomo Quarterly Meeting of Friends, held at New Hope, Phlox County, Ind., Eighth month 31st, and Ninth month 1st, 1899: We are glad to announce the presence of R. W. Raidabaugh, of Chicago, Ill., and Mattie O. Cammack, of Marion, Ind.; A. Jennie Ridgway, of Amboy, Ind. We are thankful to our Heavenly Father that we had the opportunity of listening to these, His servants, from Chicago, Marion and Amboy. They were as lights in our midst. We pray that God may continue to use them and bless them in His work.

P. W. Raidabaugh delivered four excellent addresses. The first address: How to study and teach the Bible, was very helpful and beneficial to the teachers.

The second address: Our material and how to use it. This was a plea for the children and young people, giving the various classes of children with which we have to deal, and comparing them to a bud that must have careful attention that it may grow, develop, and unfold gradually to display the beauties hidden therein.

The third address: "The Office Work of the Holy Spirit."

The fourth address: "Inspiration of the Bible."

Mattie O. Cammack delivered an address on "He Setteth the Solitary in Families." Her talk was very instructive and edifying, impressing this thought very forcibly: "All narcotics destroy cell growth. The three principal narcotics, tobacco, alcohol and opium are destroying our homes and families of to-day and future generations."

A. Jennie Ridgway gave us a very good talk on primary work.

The subject of entire consecration, as taken up in the Christian Endeavor session, was divided into three parts:

First. Entire consecration. What is it?

The term consecration means an entire willingness on our part to be, to do, and to suffer all that God wills.

Second. Entire consecration. How to do it?

Third. Results.

The entire subject was very impressive. Our conference was a spiritual uplift throughout, making us feel that we could go to our respective home work better equipped for the Master's work.

A. LEONIDAS ELLIS, Chairman.

MAGGIE JOHNSON, Secretary.

Zeno Doan is now located at Sheridan, Ind., pastor of Friends' Meeting at that place. Sheridan Friends have bright prospects for the future of the church.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING.

Eli and Mahala Jay, the fiftieth anniversary of whose marriage is herewith reported in brief, have both been prominent in the work of the church during these fifty years. Eli Jay is one of our best authorities on all matters of the history of Friends' settlements and meetings in the pioneer days, and he is still devoted to the work of collecting and preserving early records. Mahala Jay has taken a foremost place in the work of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Association, and she has taken a valuable part in the work, especially the committee work, of the various Indianapolis Conferences.

Richmond, Ind.—Eli and Mahala Jay celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage on Tenth month 24th, and many guests came to do honor to these veteran educators in the Society of Friends. There were many delightful reminiscences, and by far the best part of the program for entertainment was afforded by the bride and groom personally. It was a time for general rejoicing. Their lives had been so beneficent and their old age was so beautiful and so fruitful.

Among the exercises of the evening obtainable was a little poem, which is sent by request.

THE GOLDEN WEDDING.

The brown hair has turned to silver,
And the black hair now is gray,
But the sunlight and the starlight
Still shine o'er your onward way.

The radiance tempered with shadow,
And the smiling blended with tears;
But God's hand leads you onward
In your journey of fifty years.

You have joyed and sorrowed together,
You have toiled at the tasks He has set;
He has mingled the sweet with the bitter,
"And justice and mercy are met."

Your footsteps have only grown slower;
There comes a vague longing for rest,
But fairer than morning the sunlight
Is burning its gold in the west.

'Tis tinting and lining the stairway
That leads to the portals of gold.
Oh, fair as a dream, lies the city
Where our loved ones never grow old.

But the music of earth floats around you,
And the voices of children sweet.
They woo you to tarry a little
And list to their pattering feet.

They call you away from the stairway,
They bind you with loving guile—
These children and children's children
To tarry a longer while.

And "God bless you," dear friends are saying,
Who are gathered around you to-night,
And lead you together—still onward
Towards those portals of wondrous light.

NEW YORK YEARLY MEETING.

Glen's Falls, N. Y.—The annual gathering of the Friends of Glen's Falls was held Sixth-day evening, Tenth month 13th. There was a large attendance of the membership. After Scripture read and prayer by H. R. Keates, a program was rendered, consisting of interesting reports from the different branches of church work, as follows: Reports on finance, Sabbath-school, Woman's Foreign Missions Association, Home and Foreign Missions, Christian Endeavor, Junior Christian Endeavor, Ladies' Aid, and remarks on growth of society by H. R. Keates, all of which were most encouraging. These exercises were interspersed with singing. Light refreshments were served, and the social time enjoyed by all. These gatherings serve to bring before the members a portion of work accomplished during the year. We say portion, for no one can fully estimate the entire work of a church; that alone is known to God, who giveth the increase. However, as we enumerate the blessings received, we fully believe each heart is encouraged and energized to be more zealous the coming year for Him whom we serve.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING.

Rose Hill Monthly Meeting was held 14th of this month. It was the largest for some time. All business conducted with unity. We had the very acceptable company of William Lewis, with a minute from Harmony Monthly Meeting, Oklahoma; Achsah Kenyon, with a minute from Lowell Monthly Meeting, Kansas, and Jonathan P. Ballard, from Tonganoxie. Meetings were held each night of the ensuing week, in which our friends were enabled to preach to the different persons that came from night to night; for although it a busy time of year the attendance was good. Achsah Kenyon has visited nearly all the families at this meeting. She says it has been a source of comfort to her, and we are sure it has to us. We are glad the Lord's servants have been turned this way.

CALIFORNIA YEARLY MEETING.

Berkeley, Cal.—The Berkeley Friends began their work here about four years ago. A monthly meeting was organized at the home of Joseph and Louisa Johnson. But little work was done until the following summer, when Franklin and Mary Meredith held a meeting for worship every First-day morning and a prayer meeting in the middle of the week. A Bible School was also organized, and has been very successfully kept up. We also established shortly after beginning the other lines of work, a Y. P. S. C. E., which has ever since held the evening service with splendid success.

About two years ago the meeting was moved to a more central part of the city, and held there in a hall until the 20th of Eighth month last, when we moved into our new building on Haste St. The seating capacity of the meeting-room is two hundred and fifty, and of the prayer meeting room seventy-five. It is well located, within one block of a local steam car line, and the same distance from an electric street car line. Both rooms are well furnished, and three hundred dollars would put us entirely out of debt. It is the Lord's doings, and it is marvelous in our eyes. We have a membership of one hundred in our meeting, about the same in our Bible School, and fifty in our Y. P. S. C. E. At the beginning of the services on First-day we give from five to ten minutes to the children. Either to exercises by them, or to a chalk talk or an address for them by different persons. The result has been very satisfactory, many children being thus induced to attend meeting that would not otherwise do so after the Bible School closes.

In the evening a large Bible class is conducted by Lucy Munro, who is exceptionally well qualified, both in knowledge and experience, to give Bible instruction. After the Bible class, which is held from 6.30 to 7.30 o'clock, the young people take charge and conduct the evening service, the older people being present to cheer and help, and all work together in sweet harmony. Nannie M. Arnold has charge of a missionary band of children, which meets every First-day afternoon, and is doing excellent work. She is always ready for every good work.

REBECCA S. NAYLOR.

Married.

BURGTORF—HAWORTH.—At the home of the bride, near Lawrence, Kansas, Tenth month 25th, 1899, August E. Burtorf to Anna L. Haworth, daughter of Richard and Mattie Haworth.

RUNNION—STUMP.—Tenth month 26th, 1899, at the home of the bride's parents, Francis Runnion to Ethel Stump, both members of Van Wert Monthly Meeting.

MENDENHALL—ROBERTS.—At the home of the bride, near West Elkton, Ohio, Tenth month 12th, 1899, Curtis O. Mendenhall to Hattie C. Roberts. Their future home will be in the limits of West Elkton Meeting.

DILLON—PRICE.—Married, Luther H. Dillon, of Northbranch, Kansas, to Bertha A. Price, of Burr Oak, Kansas, at the home of the bride's parents, Ninth month 23d, 1899. They are both graduates of Northbranch Academy and earnest Christians.

JONES—HAWKES.—At Friends' Meeting House, Portland, Maine, Tenth month 18th, 1899, Fred H. Jones, son of Levi and Mary Jones, of Winthrop, and Lucy A. Hawkes, daughter of Moses and Mary Hawkes, of Portland.

Died.

ANDREW.—Myrtle Sibyl, daughter of Alpheus and Ola Andrew, died at Prairie Center, Kansas, Ninth month 12th, 1899, aged 1 year, and 9 months.

CARR.—Leonore Myrtle, daughter of Eli and Rosa Carr, died Eighth month 15th, 1899, aged 18 months. She was a member of Skiatook, Indian Territory.

COWEN.—At her home in Fairhaven, Mass., Charlott, widow of Isaac Cowen, First month 22d, 1898, aged 77 years.

CROMWELL.—At her home in Fairhaven, Mass., Eighth month 31st, 1899. Eliza Macy Howland Cromwell, in her 97th year.

DAVIS.—At her home in Fairhaven, Mass., Eleventh month 5th, 1898, Patima Slade Davis, formerly Delano, in her 88th year.

DELANO.—At her home in Fairhaven, Mass., Tenth month 7th, 1897, Phebe Swift, widow of Elnathan E. Delano, aged nearly 84 years.

GERRISH.—At his home in Fairhaven, Mass., Eleventh month 25th, 1898, Ira H. Gerrish, aged nearly 57 years.

HARVEY.—Mary Ann, widow of Elijah Harvey and daughter of Abner and Elizabeth Clawson, died at her home, Webster, Indiana, Eighth month 4th, 1899, in the 78th year of her age. She bore a long and painful illness with Christian patience and cheerfulness.

HENSON.—Martha J., daughter of James and Sarah Pitts, and wife of Braxton Henson, died in Monrovia, Indiana, Ninth month 26th, 1899, aged 74 years. She was born in North Carolina. She was an example of Christ's power to save and keep those who trust in Him.

KITCHIN.—Joseph John Kitchin died at his home in St. Louis, Mo., Tenth month 10th, 1899. His death was transition to a new life for which he was ready.

LAUGHLIN.—Ella, wife of John Laughlin, died at her home in Webster, Kansas. She joined the Friends in 1894, and was a faithful and consistent Christian, endearing herself to all who knew her.

PRITCHARD.—Carrie E., daughter of David and Sara Pritchard, died at Raysville, Indiana, Tenth month 3d, 1899, in the 22d year of her age. She was a devoted Christian girl.

SWIFT.—At her home in Fairhaven, Mass., Sixth Month 15th, 1898, Eliza B. Gardiner, widow of Seth S. Swift, in her 75th year

News and Events.

In an engagement between the Boers and British, outside of Ladysmith, on the 30th ult., a serious disaster occurred to the forces of the latter. General White thus announced the event: "I have to report a disaster to the column sent by me to take a position on a hill to guard the left flank of the troops. In these operations to-day the Royal Irish Fusiliers, No. 10 Mountain Battery, and the Gloucestershire Regiment, were surrounded in the hills, and after losing heavily had to capitulate." According to later despatches this disaster was due largely to an accident—the stampeding of the mules bearing the ammunition and supplies. It has served, however, to emphasize the strength and determination of the Boers. Ladysmith is now closely invested, and telegraphic and railroad communication appear to have been entirely cut off by General Joubert. Colenso, on the railroad between Ladysmith and Durban (a seaport town and base of supplies), has been evacuated by the British, and is now occupied by the Boers. The position of General White at Ladysmith is undoubtedly precarious, and even at this writing there are unconfirmed rumors of his surrender. Mafeking and Kimberly are still closely beset by Kruger's forces, and the English in every part of the country seem to be in great need of the reinforcements now on the way. Last week Sir Redvers Buller arrived with his staff in South Africa. He will command the English army. The native tribesmen are becoming restless and an outbreak is feared from them. They constitute an ever-present menace to both armies.

The Commercial Congress which has been in session at the National Export Exposition in this city came to a close last week, after achieving marked success in its deliberations. Already definite and practical results have come from the conference. Orders have been placed in this country, either by delegates to the Congress from abroad or through their direct agency, since the Congress opened, for goods amounting to a quarter of a million dollars. These orders come from Australia, Brazil, Austria, Sweden, and various other countries. There were thirty-seven countries officially represented at the Congress, and there were 200 representatives from Chambers of Commerce and great commercial houses in most of the important trade centers of the world. The Congress has proved a most valuable adjunct to the Philadelphia Commercial Museum in encouraging and promoting our export trade. In consideration of the broad work that is being accomplished by the Philadelphia Commercial Museum, it has been decided to ask Councils to change the name to the "International Bureau of Commerce."

The Philippine Commission has been engaged in Washington preparing its report to present to the coming session of Congress. Its work has been so divided that each commissioner is a sub-commissioner of one on a variety of topics to be embodied in their final report. To Professor Schurman has been allotted the presentation of the social and religious aspects of life among the Filipinos, the character of the judicial institutions and the civil government, etc., under the old order of things. Colonel Denby will report on the commercial interests of the islands, and the possible development of trade. Admiral Dewey will make a statement and analysis of the situation from a military and naval standpoint. Professor

A revolution in Columbia has recently broken out and seems to be sufficiently important to demand attention. A report, by way of Kingston, Jamaica, indicates that the struggle is exceedingly sanguinary. A battle is reported in which the Government forces were defeated with a loss of 300 killed and 100 wounded, though such startling loss of life seems very improbable. It is rarely the case that the number of killed exceed the wounded in modern warfare.

The comparative statement of the government receipts and expenditures for October shows receipts of $47,533,588, against $39,630,051 for October, 1898. The expenditures for the month were $44,174,026, against $53,982,276 for October, 1898, leaving a surplus for the month of $3,359,562. The surplus for the four months of the present fiscal year is $7,049,012. The monthly statement of the public debt shows a decrease during October of $2,276,199, accounted for by an increase in the amount of cash on hand and the increased redemption of national bank notes. The interest bearing debt now amounts to $1,046,049,020.

Despatches from Manila are to the effect that the promised concerted movement against Aguinaldo has been begun. Three columns of troops, under Wheaton, MacArthur and Lawton, are to move upon the enemy at Tarlac and endeavor to capture or crush them.

A despatch from Carpentras, Department of Vaucluse, to which place former Captain Alfred Dreyfus went after the conclusion of his trial, says that he is confined to his bed by illness, the result of a cold.

Vice-President Hobart, who was at death's door for several days last week, is now slightly improved and hopes are entertained for his recovery.

It is estimated that more than 30,000 able-bodied Spaniards have arrived in Cuba since January, as against 4,000, exclusive of the Spanish troops who have left for Spain during the interval. Most of those who are arriving, however, are poor people, while those who leave are generally persons who have accumulated considerable money in the islands.

Admiral Dewey has announced his engagement to the widow of General Hazen, formerly chief of the signal corps, and sister of John R. McLean, the Democratic candidate for Governor of Ohio. The house in Washington, which was purchased for Admiral Dewey with money raised by popular subscription, has been accepted by him. He will make it his home.

ECONOMY IN THE KITCHEN.

Economy in the kitchen must provide attractive and nourishing dishes out of cold left-over food, and this has been made easy by the perfection of the Enterprise Meat and Food Chopper. Many families throw away food which if economized would enable them to live both better and cheaper. Croquettes, hash, meat cakes, etc., can be made with a few turns of the handle of the Enterprise machine, and dishes which in a restaurant would cost half a dollar can be made as well at home at practically no cost, because without the aid of the Meat Chopper the materials would probably be wasted. The Enterprise Manufacturing Company, of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, the makers of these choppers, send an attractive book containing 200 choice recipes to anyone sending them 4 cents in stamps.—Adv.

HIS MOTHER.

An army nurse said to a "North American" reporter:

I was nursing Union soldiers in the Washington hospitals. In my ward a young man from New Hampshire lay dying. We all knew he could never get well, but we refrained from telling him so until the last.

Finally one day, when he must have guessed his true state, he called to me and asked if there was any hope.

"There is always hope," I replied, but turned away as I said it.

"You remind me so much of my mother," he said. "If I should die do not let her know. Rather tell her that I got well, and that I have gone to the field again. It would distress her."

Then while I looked at him he motioned me to stoop down.

"Just one last kiss—I'll think—it's moth—"

But at that his voice gave out and he fell back. My New Hampshire boy, whose mother I resembled so much, was dead.

TRICK OF A ST. BERNARD MASTIFF.

Perhaps you will allow me to add another to your interesting list of dog stories. In a house where I once boarded there was a large and remarkably sagacious St. Bernard mastiff, who used to come into my sitting room and give me his company at dinner, sitting on the floor beside my chair, with his head on a level with the plates. His master, however, fearing that he was being overfed, gave strict injunctions that this practice should no longer be permitted. On the first day of the prohibition the dog lay and sulked in the kitchen; but on the second day, when the landlady brought in the dishes, he stole in noiselessly close behind her, and while for the moment she bent over the table he slipped beneath it and waited. No sooner had she retired than he emerged from his hiding place, sat down in his usual position, and winked in my face with a look which seemed to say, "Haven't I done her?" In due course the good woman came to change the plates, and as soon as he heard her step he slunk once more under the table; but in an instant, ere she had time to open the door, he came out again, as if he had suddenly taken another thought, and threw himself down on the rug before the fire, to all appearance fast asleep. "Ah, Keeper! you there, you rascal!" exclaimed his mistress in indignant surprise, as she caught sight of him. The dog opened his eyes, half raised his body, stretched himself at full length, gave a great yawn, as if awakened from a good sleep, and then, with a wag of his tail, went forward and tried to lick her hand. It was a capital piece of acting, and the air of perfect guilelessness was infinitely amusing.—"The Spectator."

BEAUTIFUL GRATITUDE.

In her new book, "The Red Cross," Clara Barton tells the following incident of her work during the Ohio floods in 1884:

One day, as we were near the left bank of the river, we saw a small herd of cattle wading far out into the water for what they could reach. A few cabins stood back of them.

It proved to be a small neighborhood of negroes with no white "boss," as they say, but they had their own mules and cows, and were farming independently. But the food and feed were gone. The government boats had passed them without seeing them, and no help had come to them. Their mules and cows were starving; they had no one to apply to. They had their little church; and their elder, a good, honest-faced man, who led them onto our boat, told the story of their sufferings and danger.

We selected two men and two women, formed them into a committee of distribution, and wrote out formal directions and authority for them. But before presenting it to them to sign, I asked them seriously, if, in case we left these supplies with them, they thought they could share them honestly with one another, and not quarrel over them.

They were silent a moment. Then the tallest of the women rose up, and with commanding gesture said: "Miss, dese tings is from de Lord; dey is not from you, caze you is from him. He sent you to bring dem. We would not dare quarrel ober dem tings; we would not dare not to be honest wid 'em."

The supplies were put off, and the negroes left the boat and stood around the pile. We prepared to put off, expecting some demonstration, some shout of farewell from our new-found friends on shore, and held our handkerchiefs ready to wave in reply. Not a sound; and as we "rounded to" and looked back, the entire group had knelt beside the bags of grain and food, and not a head or hand was raised to bid us speed.

A Greater than we had possessed them, and, in tearful silence, we also bowed our heads, and went our way.

THE OPPRESSED CLASSES OF INDIA.

There is in Philadelphia at the present time a person by the name of T. B. Pandian, a native of India, belonging to the second highest caste of that country. He is a Christian, and is deeply devoted to the advancement of Christianity. His mission in America is on behalf of the Pariahs—a low, degraded people of southern India, who receive at the hands of the higher castes treatment not even accorded to beasts. They occupy a position virtually that of slaves, and have few privileges respected by their fellow Hindoo neighbors.

The Pariahs, however, are not slaves, because the British Government does not permit slavery in its domain, but in many respects their condition is more intolerable than that of any slaves we have knowledge of. Pariahs are not merely the poor of India. A Pariah is altogether apart from all these; he is more servile than the slave—poorer than the veriest pauper of whom we can think—more benighted than all other heathen. In short he is and has been for more than 2000 years a social leper, a creature without rights that his fellow-men are bound to respect. His presence and touch are pollution, and to guard against that pollution he must be kept apart from all other men. One frightful incident of this condition is that he must not approach or touch a drinking fountain or any of the sources from which the other 300,000,000 of India draw their supply of drinking-water. The one great need of their life is pure water. This precious boon, so freely and bountifully provided by our Heavenly Father for all His children, is absolutely denied them, unless it can be obtained from other sources than those used by the other castes. In times of drought, therefore, when the water to be found in the ditches and pools has dried up, they must go far afield and seek for and carry water often more than five miles, and generally from stagnant pools, the drinking of which produces disease, especially Asiatic cholera, which almost always has its origin among these unfortunate, and then spreads over the world.

It is the purpose of T. B. Pandian to raise funds to establish wells for the use of these poor creatures. A well that would supply a whole village and help also to water the little gardens that might be made, would cost but one hundred dollars, and because used by the Pariahs would be sacred (?) to their use. An individual, a society, or any organization could give such a well, which would be named after the donor, or as they desired.

Those who wish to contribute to this service of humanity may communicate with Samuel Emlen, 121 Coulter St., Germantown, Philadelphia.

So familiar and so popular has become The Prudential Insurance Company's utilization of the Rock of Gibraltar in its advertisements, as a means of measuring the Company's strength, that the Company, believing there is a widespread desire to learn more about Gibraltar than is generally known, has just issued a booklet giving a history of the famous fortress.

It tells us that for more than one thousand years before England seized the Rock from Spain, this famous landmark passed through innumerable fierce and bloody struggles, being successively won and lost by Saracens, Moors and Castilians.

There is a thrilling account of the great siege of the Rock, from 1779 to 1783, when the combined armies and navies of France and Spain attempted to regain possession of the fortress from England. Twice the English garrison was reduced to the verge of starvation, and there is probably no story in history to which can be paralleled the moral and physical courage, extraordinary human endurance and wonderful tenacity of purpose exhibited by the British in defending the Rock.

Handsome half-tone pictures of both the interior and exterior of the Rock are shown in the booklet, and many facts of interest are told regarding the great "hit" made by The Prudential in using the Rock of Gibraltar in its advertisements.

A copy of this booklet will be sent free to any one writing to the Home Office, in Newark, N. J., mentioning this publication.

WINTER EXCURSION TICKETS ON THE PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD.

On November 1st the Pennsylvania Railroad Company will place on sale at its principal ticket offices excursion tickets to all prominent Winter resorts in New Jersey, Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida and Cuba. The tickets will be sold at the usual low rates, with the usual liberal return limits.

The magnificent facilities of the Pennsylvania Railroad, with its many connections and through train service, make this the favorite line for Winter travel.

An illustrated book, descriptive of Winter resorts, and giving routes of travel and rates for tickets, will be furnished free after November 1st on application to ticket agents.

THE CHRISTIAN LEAGUE OF PHILADELPHIA.

"Animal food, unless mixed with at least four-fifths of vegetable products, is apt to produce irritable temper and chronic restlessness. Wherever experiments have succeeded in accustoming horses to a diet of flesh food, the results were attested by torn bridles and smashed stable doors. Carnivorous men begin to prowl to ease the feeling of gastric discomfort, and if deprived of that remedy, become fretful and vindictive, especially when the causes of nervous derangements have been complicated by other stimulants," writes Dr. Felix Oswald.

The mountain and the squirrel
Had a quarrel;
And the former called the latter "Little

"You are doubtless very big;
But all sorts of things and weather
Must be taken in together,
To make up a year
And a sphere;
And I think it no disgrace
To occupy my place.
If I'm not so large as you,
You are not so small as I,
And not half so spry.
I'll not deny you make

Talents differ; all is well and wisely put;
If I cannot carry forests on my back,
Neither can you crack a nut."

THE DUTCH AND QUAKER COLONIES IN AMERICA.

By JOHN FISKE. With 8 maps. Two vols., crown 8vo, gilt top, $4.00.

This important work traces the causes which led to the colonizing of New York by the Dutch and Pennsylvania by the Quakers; and describes the small beginnings, the formidable obstacles, the tenacious purpose of these colonies, and their gradual growth to great power. The story is told with the remarkable clearness and charm which make Mr.
Fiske's volumes of American history as delightful as they are important.

HORACE BUSHNELL.

By THEODORE T. MUNGER, D.D., author of "The Freedom of Faith," etc. With two portraits. 12mo, $2.00.

Dr. Bushnell was for years one of the most notable figures in the American pulpit, illustrious for strength of mind, beauty of character, and intrepid devotion to truth. Dr. Munger is peculiarly fitted to interpret him to this generation and to build an enduring memorial to him.

GOD'S EDUCATION OF MAN.

By WM. DEWITTE HYDE, D.D., President of Bowdoin College. 16mo, $1.25.

Dr. Hyde here states the great doctrines of religious life and thought in forms that appeal to the experience of men to-day. In his view all men belong to the Divine school and are in process of education.
The spirit of this education, its method, its purpose, its successes, and seeming failures—all these are treated with such acuteness of thought and in a vigorous style.

LETTERS AND RECOLLECTIONS OF JOHN MURRAY FORBES.

Edited by his daughter, SARAH F. HUGHES.
With Portraits. 2 vols., 8vo, gilt top, $5.00.

Several features combine to render this work one of uncommon interest. Mr. Forbes was a man of remarkable force and quality of character, a leader among business men, a prince among public benefactors, a citizen of the finest public spirit, an efficient supporter of the best in society and the nation. His personal relations included nearly all the leading Americans of his time, and his autobiography, supplemented by many letters and by the admirable editorial skill of his daughter, makes a work of remarkable importance and interest.

An entirely new issue of the popular Household Tennyson. It is printed from larger type than before, it is profusely illustrated; and contains also portraits and pictures of historic buildings, and is, in fact, the most thoroughly illustrated Tennyson offered to the public. The book is carefully printed on opaque paper, and is attractively bound in a new style.

Oh, minstrel of these borean hills,
Where twilight hours are long,
I would my boyhood's fragrant days
Had known thy plaintive song;

II
Had known thy vest of ashen gray,
Thy coat of drab and brown,
The bands of jet upon thy head
That clasp thy golden crown.

III
We heard thee in the cold White Pass,
Where cloud and mountain meet,
Again where Muir's great glacier shone
Far spread beneath our feet.

IV
I bask me now on emerald heights
To catch thy faintest strain,
But cannot tell if in thy lay
Be more of joy or pain.

V
Far off behold the snow-white peaks
Athwart the sea's blue shade;
Anear there rise green Kadiak hills,
Wherein thy nest is made.

VI
I hear the wild bee's mellow chord,
In airs that swim above;
The lesser hermit tunes his flute
To solitude and love.

VII
But thou, sweet singer of the wild,
I give more heed to thee;
Thy wistful note of fond regret
Strikes deeper chords in me.

VIII
Farewell, dear bird! I turn my face
To other skies than thine—
A thousand leagues of land and sea
Between thy home and mine.

SHE QUIT COFFEE.

And Got Well in Common Sense Way.

"When I left off coffee, it seemed that was the thing hardest to drop. I had been put on a diet for stomach trouble, had a good appetite, but no food would stay on my stomach. I was compelled to leave off one thing after another, but never suspected coffee. When I decided to leave off the coffee, however, my stomach trouble ceased entirely, also my nervousness, and I can again sleep well. But a new trouble then arose. How was I to get along without my coffee? It was a great temptation when I saw it on the table in the morning. One day a friend who knew of my case sent me a package of Postum Cereal Food Coffee. After it had been prepared, I had great misgivings about using it, for it looked so much like fine coffee that I feared it would have the same effect, but I soon found it to be free from all injurious properties and its use has been of great benefit to me.

"I have never had any taste for coffee since using Postum Cereal Food Coffee. My children derive great benefit from using Postum. We all enjoy it very much, having discarded the old-fashioned coffee entirely." Alice Lawrence, Bowen, Mont.

Postum Food Coffee is sold by all first-class grocers at 15 and 25 cents per package.

THE ETERNAL GOODNESS.

"Thy heart must have been full of love for that poor girl," said John G. Whittier, softly, with moist eyes, as the superintendent of the Woman's Reformatory Prison of Massachusetts told him an experience of her work; and in that brief sentence the poet touched the spring of all philanthropy, which the sociological student in college halls or tenement settlements can ignore only at the cost of failure.

A young woman had been sentenced to the reformatory, who for a long time gave a great deal of trouble. The devoted superintendent visited her day after day, trying to get her confidence, but without success. One evening, when she was in a violent temper, Mrs. Johnson took her to her own room, but all her gentleness and tact met with no response, and feeling driven to the very wall, she opened a book upon the table. It was Whittier's poems, and her eye fell upon "The Eternal Goodness."

"Here is a beautiful poem," she said to her prisoner. "Take it to your room, learn this verse, and recite it to me in the morning:

"Yet, in the maddening maze of things,
And tossed by storm and flood,
To one fixed stake my spirit clings,
I know that God is good!"

"It is beautiful," the girl responded, and she carried the book away.

The next morning she went to the superintendent and repeated not one, but seven verses, and on the following day she recited the whole poem. A veritable transformation soon marked her face and actions, and one day she stopped the superintendent in the hall.

"When I wake in the night," she said, "and the old rage comes over me, and I want to smash windows and kill people, I say those verses, and they quiet me and comfort me. They have saved me."

A poet's word and a woman's heart full of love for an unfortunate and erring sister—these are the springs from which has come a life redeemed to health and service!

KIPLING'S SCHOOL TRAINING.

Rudyard Kipling is said to have led a rough-and-tumble life at the United Service College, in North Devon, England. As an illustration of his behavior in class, the following is told:—

There was a certain geography master who greatly favored the drawing of sections of the earth's surface, showing the mountain ranges, rivers, lakes, seas, strata, etc., which was generally executed by his pupils on sheets of foolscap.

At first the master was contented with quite ordinary distances between two given points, as from London to Edinburgh, Paris to Berlin, and so forth; but gradually he came to lengthen them to an alarming extent—Chicago to Timbuctoo, Cape Town to Moscow—which, while it embarrassed the rest of the boys, suggested a humorous idea to Kipling.

From somewhere or other he procured several rolls of wall-paper, and then day and night, with pen and brushes, he labored diligently on a gigantic section, inserting men, birds, beasts, and fishes, trees—in fact, any thing he could think of, which, being at length completed to his satisfaction, Kipling calmly awaited the result of his joke.

When at last the geographical master called for that particular section, to his surprise and the amusement of Kipling's classmates, Kipling unwound his gigantic roll on the floor. At first it was evident that the master mentally debated the question as to whether it was a case demanding a public rebuke by the instant use of the cane or commendation in its highest form by full marks, when Kipling's absolutely innocent expression of countenance decided him to adopt the latter course.

We think it would be an excellent thing if all the children were as sensitive to praise and blame as the dog in the following story. And if Lion felt so much mortification over coming into the parlor with muddy feet, cannot our boys be a little more careful even than he was?

A Newfoundland dog owned by a New Orleans lady gave an entertaining illustration of the fact that in some ways dogs comprehend what is said to them.

One day a lady called on his mistress, and during her visit Lion came in rather shyly, lay down on the parlor carpet, and went to sleep. The conversation ran on, and the visitor finally said: "What a handsome Newfoundland dog you have!"

"Yes," said his mistress. "He is a very good dog, and takes excellent care of the children." Lion opened the other eye, and waved his tail complacently to and fro on the carpet. "When the baby goes out he always goes with her, and I feel sure that no harm can come to her," his mistress continued. Lion's tail thumped up and down violently on the carpet. "And he is so gentle to them all, and such a playmate and companion to them, that we would not take one thousand dollars for him." Lion's

The Singer No. 24.

AUTOMATIC CHAIN-STITCH.

The general advantages of this type of machine for family sewing comprise greatest ease and quietness of operation, simplicity of construction and the elasticity of the single thread seam. When needle is threaded the machine is ready, the stitch requiring neither bobbin nor shuttle. The thread is taken from one spool and is so interwoven and twisted that seam cannot rip unless its finished end be unlocked. When this is done, the entire length of thread can be quickly withdrawn without injury to the fabric.

Every genuine machine carries the trade-mark.

tail now went up and down, to and fro, and round and round with great, undisguised glee. "But," said the mistress, "Lion has one serious fault." Total subsidence of Lion's tail, together with the appearance of an expression of great concern on his face. "He will come in here with his dirty feet and lie down on the carpet, when I have told him time and again that he mustn't do it."

At this point Lion would doubtless have remonstrated if he could; but, being speechless, he arose with an air of the utmost dejection and humiliation, and slunk out of the room with his lately exuberant tail totally crestfallen.—"Our Dumb Animals."

SONNET

In commemoration of the first landing of William Penn in Pennsylvania.

BY LLOYD MIFFLIN

[Written for the Reception given by The Colonial Society of Pennsylvania, Eleventh month 8th, 1899.]

*How beautiful she looked in that far day,
With all her canvas flying in the breeze,—
The stately “Welcome,” from the stormy seas,
Wafted on dove-like wings along the bay!
“Peace on the Earth,” her fluttering pennons say,
And from her deck a voice: “Good-will to men!”
For he had come, the courtly Quaker, Penn,
Full of his dream of philanthropic sway.*

*And must the feet of Progress ever be Incarnadined by still recurring wars,
While from her path is swept each barbarous horde?
Oh, may this Land, now under thrall of Mars,
End her red slaughter by the Asian sea,
And sheathe her once inviolable sword!*

THE SEARCH FOR TRUTH.

No AGE in the history of the world has been so earnest and sincere in its search after truth as our own. In fact, it is the earnestness of this search that has frightened so many good Christian people. They had supposed that the truth was already found. They had thought that truth was a "deposit" handed down to us, and that our sole business was to guard, keep and defend it. When lo, they see men questioning and testing and probing even things that seemed surest. At first glance this search has seemed a sadly destructive work. It has reversed the old method which was to accept truth on authority, and to teach it dogmatically—i.e., without requiring proof for it, and it has substituted the scientific method which means an impartial study of facts in order to find the truth through the facts.

Everyone of the great discoveries in nature has come by this latter method. "Authority," said that the earth was flat; a study of the facts proved that it was round. "Authority" said that it was stationary, and that the heavenly bodies revolved about it; a study of the facts proved that it is only one among the planets revolving about a central sun. In our own day a study of facts has reversed practically every position of "authority" in the realm of nature, and all thinking men of all schools and of nearly all religious faiths recognize now that the only possible way of finding the truth about our visible world and its laws is to study the facts impartially.

Nobody would ever object to such a method, were it not for the fact that the new conclusions often conflict with established religious ideas. But in our own day this method of the study of facts has pushed out of the realm of nature, and is being applied to everything in the universe which can be studied. There are no barriers which this method respects. It tests the Rock of Ages and scrutinizes Holy Places just as eagerly as it does a new element or a new fossil. Everywhere the search after truth has been fearless and by a study of facts. It has seemed to many, we repeat, a destructive work, and those who are most frightened at it retreat farther and farther into the strongholds of dogmatism and "authority." We realize, of course, that a systematic study of facts, a fearless search after truth must destroy many theories and traditions which seem important, and perhaps at first vital, but nobody who cares in his soul for the Christian faith should fail to realize that this search for truth—this method of test—has been much more constructive than destructive. If it has shaken some traditional beliefs and opinions, it has on the other hand resulted in putting the fundamental facts of our religious faith on an unshakable foundation. The foundation of God still stands sure. No age has ever been as sure as ours of the Divinity of Jesus Christ—of the Incarnation of God. To no generation has either His life or His death meant so much. Salvation through faith in Christ means inconceivably more to us to-day than to any people since the disciples and Paul. The Holy Spirit is believed in no longer as an article in a creed, but as a present power, moving upon our hearts, empowering for service, moulding lives and leading into the truth. This is "the demonstration of the Spirit." And finally our certainty of the inspiration of the Bible is of a new and much higher order than that of the centuries which held the dogma blindly. God is not the God of the dead, but the God of the living. He is in the movements of our modern life. He is leading us into truth, and the men who are to help this age are the men who have a positive, constructive faith, and a high hope in a living God.

A RELIGIOUS LESSON FROM FOOT-BALL.

WE do not propose to discuss the question whether foot-ball games are right or wrong, but we want to use them to illustrate a method of work for Friends' meetings this winter. Nobody who has ever studied the foot-ball work of a college can have failed to be greatly impressed by what he sees. It seems almost second nature for a college man to subordinate everything to the work of producing a winning "team." Men are chosen for the positions on it on account of their fitness, and for no other reason. Those who fail to "make the team," work all the harder so that they may be ready to get in as "substitutes" when a team man is unable to play. Day after day these men drill. They run before breakfast; they eat a special diet; they "keep their bodies under;" they learn to control themselves. All the other able men of the college form into a "scrub-team" to play against them, to give them hard practice, and to drill them for victory. The college graduates and trainers come day after day to study the plays, to criticize and to advise. No pains are spared, no work is too hard, no sacrifice too great, and this is all to produce a team which shall win a game against another team which has been similarly trained. While the play goes on the whole college stands on the side-lines to shout and cheer in order that the spirit of the entire college may animate the eleven men who represent it. Now for the lesson:

A Friends' meeting is an organization generally about as large in numbers as our small colleges,—sometimes enrolling even six to eight hundred. It exists for two purposes: to strengthen and build up its own membership—i.e., to "perfect saints"—and secondly, to propagate Christianity in narrower or wider circles about itself. One would suppose that at least it would manifest as much spirit and devotion and sacrifice in accomplishing these divinely commissioned purposes as a college would in winning a foot-ball game! But, no; it does not. If it did, no community in this country could resist its influence. Keeping in mind our foot-ball illustration, the first point would be to select those who are most gifted—i.e., most fit, for the active work of the church, regardless of every other consideration—and then those not so selected should be full of zeal to supplement, or to supply the places, of the real working force of the body. Then the drill and training should begin, to make every worker of every sort fit for success in this service. Every situation and condition of the meeting and the community should be studied and minutely considered, as though the whole success of the church depended upon it. Then the whole membership of the meeting should realize, as a "foot-ball scrub" does, that everything depends upon their earnest and faithful co-operation with the more special working force of the body. No man or woman, whether minister, missionary or committeeman, does telling, effective work until he feels the whole body of the church behind him, and its spirit animating and supporting him.

Our work is scattering because it lacks this compactness, this co-operative energy, this "unity of the spirit in the bond of love," and it is weak because we do not show that patient, persistent, self-sacrificing effort to win souls which college men show to win games.

ONE FEATURE OF THE RECENT ELECTION.

EVERYBODY seems able to get some satisfaction out of the election this month, except the defeated candidates. All the party leaders find a comforting forecast in the result. The administration is "vindicated" or "condemned," according to one's point of view, and the state one chooses to judge by. Bryanism is also "vindicated" or "condemned" in the same way.

One significant point, however, stands clearly before us, and should be thoughtfully considered. Three of the most noted political "bosses" in American politics were on trial before the people, and they were all "vindicated," at least they consider that they were. Richard Croker had set his head to defeat Mazet in New York city, since Mazet was the chairman of the committee which has, during the summer, been investigating the Tammany government of the city, and the "boss" felt that if he could defeat this man, who had held him and his methods up before the world, he would stand vindicated. In this he succeeded.

Quay once more succeeded in forcing one of his men on to the head of the Republican ticket in Pennsylvania, so that a vote for the candidate meant a vote to "vindicate" Quay and his methods. The long-suffering Pennsylvanians again supported their master by a majority of 100,000, though this Quay candidate, let it be said, ran 50,000 behind his ticket.

In Ohio the large Republican victory is accepted as a "vindication" of Senator Hanna, who, with Senator Platt, of New York, and the two men previously named, may properly be called the "Big Four" of American "Bosses." It should, however, be recognized that the large Republican vote in Ohio was mainly due to a desire on the part of the people of that state to support the President, and it was this strong incentive which floated Hanna. Still, when all explanations are made, it must be recognized that we as a people submit quietly and patiently to the rule of bosses.

A CALL FOR HELP.

WE have from time to time given accounts of the sufferings, the migrations, and the final colonization in Canada of that interesting Russian people who are known as Doukhobors. They have suffered untold hardship in their devotion to their conscientious belief that war is unchristian, and in their refusal to compromise in any way with militarism. They are now in extreme need in their new quarters on the northwestern frontier. The rigorous northern winter has already begun, and without help they would certainly perish.

Philadelphia Friends have already come nobly to their assistance, and a Friend is now among them distributing supplies. We trust Friends everywhere will respond to this call for help. THE AMERICAN FRIEND will receive and report all amounts sent, and all donations will be put at once where they will reach the Doukhobors most effectively.

EDITORIAL NOTE.

LLOYD MIFFLIN has very kindly sent us his sonnet, written in commemoration of the landing of William Penn. We put it on our cover this week, and join in his solemn and fitting prayer at the end.

GENERAL CHURCH NOTES.

R. F. Horton, an able English Congregational pastor in England, has discarded the use of the title "Rev."

In the November "Arena," Count Tolstoi vehemently denounces the evil that has come to Christianity from alliance with the State, sentiments which, if uttered by any other Russian, would cause expulsion from the empire.

F. B. Meyer and other officials of the Evangelical Alliance of England, in view of "the dark and troubled condition of the world," have issued a call to Christians in all parts of the world "to unite in continual humiliation and prayer."

The Czecks of Bohemia have raised the sum of $15,000 with which they intend to erect a monument to the memory of John Huss. They have asked the government the privilege of placing it in the most public square of the city of Prague.

The New York "Sun," which recently opened its columns to letters discussing the immortality of the soul, has received many communications from men and women of all shades of belief and all walks of life. It is proposed to print the letters in book form.

Regarding the charge that the Roman Catholic Church was identified with the condemnation of Dreyfus, the attitude of "La Croix," a well-known Catholic paper in Paris, is at least interesting. Before the conviction of Dreyfus by the Rennes court-martial "La Croix" said: "The Dreyfus case has hardly anything military about it. It is a religious case." After the judgment it said: "Justice has been done. Dreyfus has been condemned. As Frenchmen we rejoice over it. As Catholics we praise God for it."

A little band of religious enthusiasts set out one year ago from Missouri to Palestine, expecting there to witness the second coming of Christ. The pilgrimage, it is said, was the result of a tract written by a woman, called "The City of the Great King." The pilgrims sold their possessions for the sake of securing means to make the journey. They are now at Jerusalem in most destitute circumstances.

Horace L. Hastings, the editor and publisher of "The Christian," "The Anti-Infidels Library," and a large number of books, tracts and pamphlets, died on the 21st ult., at his home in Goshen, Mass. He came of four generations of preachers. Before he was eighteen he had entered upon evangelistic work. He was not quite sixty-eight years old at the time of his death.

At the State Convention of the Pennsylvania colored Baptists, in October, the chairman of the National Baptist Association, L. G. Jordan, reported that there are 1,800,365 colored Baptists in this country, with 14,771 churches and 14,000 ordained ministers. The church supports twelve missionaries in Africa. At present, it was said, a native is not allowed to walk on the foot pavements of their cities, or to be seen after dark without permit, and no government efforts are made to elevate the colored men.

CROSSES.

The crosses of the present moment always
Bring their own grace and their own comfort, too;
We see the hand of our dear, loving Father,
Who for us some sweet, blessed thing would do.

But crosses of our own weak, sad foreboding,
Outside His dispensation blest are seen;
We see them, but we have no grace to bear them,
And so comes darkness, where His light has been.

We see them through a weak and faithless spirit
Which seems all dark, and banishes His grace;
So everything in them is sad and dreary,
And shuts from view our Father's smiling face.

Let us throw self aside! No more self-seeking:
And every moment then, His blessed will Unfolding, will console us every moment,
While His sweet voice will cheer and comfort still,
And we shall love His blessed, blessed will.

E. T. LARKIN.

In doing our very best to be good ourselves we bring a tremendous unconscious influence to bear on every one around us. No one can meet a man who transparently and constantly tries to do his duty without being either spurred or shamed by the encounter.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

ANGEL VISITS AND HOW TO SECURE THEM

BY FRANCIS E. CLARK.

Courtesy has been well defined as "doing a kind deed in a kindly way." The last part of this definition is quite as important as the first part. It is not enough to have a kind heart and a benevolent disposition; it is not enough to give alms and to do deeds of charity. The courteous man is more than kind, he is also kindly. The rough, gruff, over-bearing philanthropist, who throws his charities to the needy as he would pitch a bone at a dog, is not a model of kindness, however large-hearted and generous he may be.

I have in mind a prominent religious worker, who is always offending people by his ungraciousness and boorishness of manner. He is a man of immense power, of large and generous impulses, of sympathetic nature, of undoubted influence in the religious world, and yet he so persistently wears the rough side of his coat outermost to the world, that he has a very unsavory reputation for discourtesy, and on some occasions does as much harm by his boorishness as he does good by his persuasive eloquence.

He reminds me of the Japanese laborers when arrayed in their rain cloaks; a coat of coarse straw meant to shed the rain, in which the individual straws often stick up and out, making the wearer look like a huge porcupine. So are some men's dispositions. Though their hearts are warm and tender, they always wear their repellent rain coats into society. But this is not the Biblical idea of the righteous man. He is truly courteous, as well as just; he always does a thing in a kind way.

Abraham is a capital illustration of genuine courtesy in his entertainment of the angels who, unannounced and unheralded, in the garb of ordinary wayfarers, presented themselves at his tent door.

Note how courteous he is in his hospitality! The three strangers suddenly present themselves. How does he know who they are? They have not presented their credentials nor any letters of introduction. To be sure, since they lived four thousand years ago on the plains of Mamre they could hardly have been insurance agents or book canvassers; but how does Abraham know but that they want to interest him in their pet financial scheme of cultivating a new breed of sheep, or a distinct variety of camels on the plains? How does he know but they will present a subscription paper for a new university or library in Egypt, where letters and polite literature already flourish?

Nevertheless, though they present no credentials, he bows himself to the ground and begs them to pass not on, but to let his servant bring them water that they may wash their feet, and urges them to rest under the trees, while he himself promises to bring them food; "a morsel of bread" in his modest, Oriental style he calls it. He begs them to "Comfort their hearts." What a homely, courteous phrase that is! Then after that he tells them that they shall go on their way.

Moreover, he did not speak soft words to strangers, and then go in and scold at his wife, because of their unexpected arrival, expressing the wish, for her private ear, that they would stay away and mind their own business, and not sponge upon his hospitality. But he hurried into the tent and said to Sarah, "Hasten, and quickly make ready three measures of fine meal and knead it and make cakes upon the hearth." Then he himself ran unto the herd (see how eager he is to make good his promise of hospitality), and "fetched a calf," not an old, scraggy, worthless, member of the herd, but a calf "tender and good," and gave it to his servant, who hastened to dress it.

Then he took butter and milk, and the calf, and the cakes as well, I suppose, and set them before the strangers. That was a "morsel of bread" indeed!

But this was not enough to satisfy his kindly soul, for while they ate, he, the master, the great sheik, the famous ruler of all the country round about, "stood by under the trees" while they sat and ate their fill, ready apparently to anticipate any slightest want. No wonder that to such a courteous nobleman the angel soon revealed himself and gave to him a wondrous promise of future blessings.

Such courtesy always commands the visit of the angels. The man entertained may be a tramp or a bore, he may apparently have no blessing in his hand to give, and have no influence to command one either from God or man, but the very fact of such royal courtesy brings the angels of all good will and kindness to the heart of the entertainer. Unawares he entertains the heavenly guest, who abides with him when the perhaps unworthy recipient of his hospitality has gone his way.

But more likely it is neither an angel in disguise, nor a tramp, nor an imposter, but some worthy man or woman—some fellow-being, perhaps—who has little claim upon us as the world counts obligation, but whom God has sent to us for a word of cheer and the outstretched hand of welcome; the representative of some good cause; the pleader for some worthy mission; the young man who needs a start in life; the young woman who needs a little mothering or fathering; the orphan boy or girl who needs up-bringing in a Christian family; some one or other, who, for a day or a year, needs hospitality and kindly care. Let us give it to him in a kindly way. Let us show him not only charity but courtesy. With him will come the angels who will never leave our threshold.

After a time such courtesy becomes habitual. It need not be put on or assumed; the kindly heart expresses itself always in a kindly deed or word. I know a man who, when talking with a lady through a telephone, though she may be miles away, is sure to take off his hat and bow and smile when he hears her voice, and act the gentleman as though he were in her immediate presence. The courteous man will always act the gentleman before every person who crosses his path. He will act the gentleman because he is the gentleman. He can never be taken off his guard. He sees in every human being a possible angel; an angel fallen, degraded, almost hopeless sometimes, but a possible angel, whom he must treat with courtesy, because however defaced, he is made in the image of God.

To such a man angel visits are neither few nor far between, but every day brings a new angel to the door of his tent.

Boston, Mass.

A LITTLE WHILE.

In our Lord's last conversation with his disciples before his betrayal and crucifixion, he said to them, "A little while and ye shall not see me; and again a little while and ye shall see me, because I go unto the Father." Before them was the bloody tragedy on Calvary, and forty days after that his ascension through the vernal air to heaven. They would see him no more in earthly form. But in another little while—in fifty days thereafter—he would come again by his Holy Spirit in the wondrous baptism of power at Pentecost. He was then to be glorified by the Holy Spirit in the hearts of his disciples. Jesus Christ is with his people now; for did he not promise, "Lo, I am with you alway?"

Those sweet, tender words, "a little while," have deep thoughts in them, like the still ocean at the twilight—thoughts too deep for our fathoming. They breathe some precious consolations to those whose burdens are heavy, either of care, or poverty, or sickness. If the prosperous can enjoy their prosperity only for a little while, neither shall the mourner weep much longer, or God's poor children carry much longer the pains or privations of poverty. The daily toil to earn the daily bread, the carking care to keep the barrel from running low and the scanty "cruse" from wasting, will soon be over. Cheer up, my brother! "A little while and ye shall see me," says your blessed Master, "for I go to prepare a place for you." Oh, the infinite sweep of the glorious transition! A few years here in a lowly dwelling, whose rent it is hard to pay, and then infinite ages in the palace of the King of kings. Here a scanty table and coarse raiment soon outworn; yonder a robe of resplendent light at the marriage-supper of the Lamb. Let this blissful thought put new courage into thy soul, and fresh sunshine into thy countenance.

I sometimes go into a sick chamber where the "prisoners of Jesus Christ" are suffering with no prospect of recovery. Perhaps the eyes of some of those chronic invalids may fall upon this article. My dear friends, put under your pillow these sweet words of Jesus—"a little while." It is only for a little while that you are to serve your Master by patient submission to his holy will. That chronic suffering will soon be over. That disease which no earthly physician can cure will soon be cured by your Divine Physician, who by the touch of his messenger will cure you, in an instant, into the perfect health of heaven! You will exchange this weary bed of pain for that crystal air in which none shall say, "I am sick;" neither shall there be any more pain.

Not only to the sick and to the poverty-stricken child of God do these tender words of our Redeemer bring solace. Let these words, "a little while," bring a healing balm to hearts that are smarting under unkindness, or wounded by neglect or pining under privations, or bleeding under sharp bereavements. I offer them as a sedative to sorrows and a solace under sharp afflictions. "A little while and ye shall see me," and the sight of him shall wipe out all the memories of the darkest hours through which you made your way into the everlasting rest.

A few more struggles here,
A few more conflicts o'er,
A little while of toil and tears,
And we shall weep no more.

These words of the Master are also a trumpet call to duty. In a little while my post in the pulpit shall be empty; what manner of minister ought I to be in fidelity to dying souls? Sabbath-school teacher, in a little while you shall meet the young immortals in your class for the last time. Are you winning them to Christ? The time is short. Whatever your hands find to do for the Master, do it. Do it, Aquila and Priscilla, in the Sunday school! Do it, Lydia, in the home! Do it, Dorcas, with thy needle, and Mary in the room of sickness and sorrow! Do it, Tertius, with thy pen, and, Apollos, with thy tongue! Do it, praying Hannah, with thy children, and make for them the "little coat" of Christian character which they shall wear when you have gone home to a mother's heavenly reward.

Only think, too, how much may be achieved in a little while. The atonement for a world of perishing sinners was accomplished between the sixth hour and the ninth hour on darkened Calvary. That flash of divine electricity from the Holy Spirit which struck Saul of Tarsus to the ground was the work of an instant, but the great electric burner of the converted Paul has blazed over all the world for centuries. A half hour's faithful preaching of Jesus by a poor itinerant Methodist exhorter at Colchester brought the boy Spurgeon to a decision, and launched the mightiest ministry of modern times. Lady Henry Somerset tells us that a few minutes of solemn reflection in her garden decided her to exchange a life of fashionable frivolity for a life of consecrated philanthropy. Why cite any more cases when every Christian can testify that the best decisions and deeds of his or her life turned on the pivot of a few minutes? In the United States mint they coin eagles out of the sweepings of gold-dust from the floor. Brethren, we ought to be misers of our minutes! If on a dying bed they are so precious, why not in the fuller days of our healthful energies? Said General Mitchell, the great astronomer, to an officer who apologized for being only a few minutes behind time, "Sir, I have been in the habit of calculating the tenth part of a second!"

Our whole eternity will hinge on the "little while" of probation here. Only an inch of time to choose between an eternity of glory or the endless woes of hell! And as a convert exclaimed in a prayer-meeting, "it was only a moment's work with me when I was in earnest." May God help us all to be faithful—only for a little while; and then comes the unfading crown.—Theodore L. Cuyler, in "Christian Work," and sent by him to THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

"THE DESIRE OF NATIONS."

By EDWIN MARKHAM.

"And the Government shall be upon His shoulders, and His name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, Mighty God and Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace."—Isaiah.

Earth will go back to her lost youth,
And life grow deep and wonderful as Truth,
When the wise King out of the nearing Heaven comes,
To break the spell of long millenniums—
To build with song again
The broken hope of men;
To hush and heroize the world
Beneath the flag of brotherhood unfurled.
And He will come some day,
Already is His star upon the way!
He comes! O world, He comes!
But not with bugle cry nor roll of doubling drums.

Nay, nor as when the Hero-King of Heaven,
Came with upbraiding to His faint eleven,
And found the world-way to His bright feet barred
And hopeless, then, because men's hearts were hard.

Nor will He come like carnal kings of old,
With pomp of pilfered gold,
Nor like the Pharisees with pride of prayer,
Nor as the stumbling, foolish stewards dream,
In tedious argument and fruitless creed;
But in the passion of the heart's warm deed,
Will come the Man Supreme.
Yea, for He comes to lift the public care,
To build on earth the vision hung in air;
This is the one fulfilment of His Law—
The one fact in the mockeries that seem—
This is the vision that the Prophets saw—
The Comrade Kingdom builded in their dream.

[The photograph from which this picture of Edwin Markham is made, was taken last summer while he was visiting our Friend, James M. Price, who is shown on the left. The latter has since departed this life.]

Nay, for He comes to loosen and unbind,
To build the lofty purpose in the mind.
To stir the heart's deep chord. . . .
No rude horns parleying, no shock of shields,
Nor, as of old, the glory of the Lord,
To half-awakened shepherds in the fields,
Looking with foolish faces on the rush
Of the great splendor, when the pulsing hush
Came o'er the hills, came o'er the Heavens afar,
Where on their cliffs of stars the watching seraphs are.
Nor, as of old, when first the Strong One trod,
The Power of Sepulchers, our risen Lord!
When on that deathless morning in the dark,
He quit the Garden of the Sepulcher,
Setting the oleander boughs astir,
And pausing at the gate with backward hark,—

No, not as in that elder day,
Comes now the King upon the human way.
He comes with power, his white, unfearing face
Shines through the Social Passion of the race.
He comes to frame the Freedom of the Law,
To touch these men of earth
With feeling of life's oneness and its worth,
With feeling of its mystery and awe.
And when He comes into the world gone wrong,
He will rebuild her beauty with a song,
To every heart He will its own dream be.
One moon has many phantoms in the sea.
Out of the North the Norns will cry to men,
"Balder, the Beautiful, has come again!"
The flutes of Greece will whisper from the dead,
"Apollo has unveiled his sunbright head!"

The stones of Thebes and Memphis will find voice,
 "Osiris comes, O tribes of Time rejoice!"
 The social architects who build the State,
 Serving the dream at Citadel and gate,
 Will hail him coming through the labor-hum,
 And glad, quick cries will go from man to man:
 "Lo, He has come, our Christ, the Artisan,
 The King who loved the lilies, He has come!"
 He will arrive, our Counselor and Chief,
 And with bleak faces lighted up will come
 The earth worn mothers from their martyrdom
 To tell Him of their grief.
 And glad girls carolling from field and town,
 Will go to meet Him with the labor-crown,
 A new crown woven of the heading wheat,
 And men will sit down at His sacred feet,
 And He will say, the King,
 "Come, let us live the poetry we sing,"
 And these, his burning words, will break the ban—
 Words that will grow to be,
 On continent, on sea,
 The rallying cry of man. . . .

He comes to make the long Injustice right,
 Comes to push back the shadow of the night,
 The gray tradition full of flint and flaw,
 Comes to wipe out the insults to the soul,
 The insults of the Few against the Whole,
 The insults they make righteous with a Law.

Yea, He will bear the safety of the State,
 For in His still and rhythmic steps will be
 The power and music of Alcione,
 Who holds the swift Heavens in their starry fate.
 Yea, He will lay on souls the Power of Peace,
 And send on kingdoms torn the sense of home,
 More than the fire of joy that burned on Greece,
 More than the light of law that rose on Rome.

DILWORTH SCHOOLEY.*

The memory of the just is blessed.—Prov. 10: 7.

To no one within the range of my acquaintance does this language of Proverbs more fitly apply than to my late beloved brother and fellow laborer in the vineyard of the Lord. My first real acquaintance with Dilworth Schooley and his beloved and faithful wife was late in the autumn of 1855, soon after our marriage. They came and partook of our humble hospitality and spent the afternoon with us. From this token of respect and Christian attention a friendship grew up which increased with the passing years. Dilworth Schooley accompanied Samuel Lloyd in a religious visit in Canada early in the sixties, leaving an influence for good which was freely spoken of to the writer many years afterwards, and also in California, by Canadian families of Friends who had settled at Alamitos, his name was spoken of with feelings of sympathy and love.

He associated himself with me very early in my ministry, and was my constant companion and faithful armorbearer wherever I went among the churches in the West and South for many years. Being of a genial and loving disposition, gentle and full of sympathy, and a favorite among the youth and children, he was largely instrumental in the ingathering of hundreds of precious souls which were converted to God in the early days of our revival work. Although so efficient and helpful in the work, he was always inclined to keep himself in the background. He seldom spoke of his part of the service, giving his whole thought to my comfort, making the way easy for my services as a true yoke fellow and companion. Always bearing his own expenses, he rejoiced in whatever might be handed to me by the stewards of the manifold gifts of God, sometimes willingly supplying from his own scanty means what might be lacking in traveling and incidental expenses, thus proving his allegiance to Christ in his faithfulness to the charge God had given him. As I visited him from time to time in his last sickness, he often recalled with great tenderness the seasons of refreshing we had enjoyed together for so many years in the Master's service, saying near the close of his life here, as he referred to the service of the past: "There are many dear ones waiting at the beautiful gate to welcome me, praise the name of the Lord." In the triumphs of living faith he entered into the joys and blessings of that rest prepared for the people of God. He has ceased from his labors on earth, but his work will follow him. He was an Elder in deed and in truth. By request some time before his death, I was called by telegram from our yearly meeting to attend his funeral on the twelfth of Ninth month, 1899, as a last tribute of love to one who was bound to my heart in the tender ties of gospel love.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

THE ORIGIN AND GROWTH OF EDUCATION AMONG FRIENDS IN WESTERN INDIANA.

BY HARLOW LINDLEY.

The material used in the preparation of this subject has been mostly gleaned from the quarterly meetings' and monthly meetings' records of the church, and from a few individuals who were acquainted with some of the points in question.

A general view has been taken of the situation of Friends in Vigo, Parke, Vermillion, Boone, Montgomery and Tippecanoe Counties, while particular attention has been directed to Parke County, as it was early settled by Friends, and the strongest Friends' communities in our territory were located within it. Within this county also grew up the oldest and leading institution of higher education among Friends in the western part of the State.

In 1647, George Fox began to assemble large bodies of people, who were seeking the truth, by his earnest preaching of the simple faith of the early Christians, and from the time of the organization of the Friends' Church, or the Society of Friends, as it was then called, the church has taken a deep interest in the proper education of its children and the cause of education in general. To this end schools under its care were early established.

Among those associated with the founder of the church were graduates of Oxford and Cambridge, and a number who had enjoyed the advantages of the higher seats of learning on the continent.

George Fox valued very highly the importance of education, and he recommended to his followers the establishment of schools for the purpose of instructing boys and girls "in all things civil and useful in creation."

The Friends early declared that "we deny nothing for children's learning that may be honest and useful for them to know, whether relative to Divine principles, or that may be serviceable for them to learn in regard to the outward creation."

The General Epistle of the church in 1700 said: "It is the earnest desire of this meeting, for the Lord's sake, the honor of His name, and truth and the good of posterity, that a goodly care be taken by you for the due education of Friends' children," and this same concern—in thought, at least—has come down through various superior meetings to the present time.

The subject was thus constantly pressed upon the attention of Friends, and committees were often sent to visit meetings in order to secure increased attention to the subject, particularly emphasizing these four points in regard to education:

1. Cultivation of the religious element implanted in the soul.
2. Every one should secure at least a good, ordinary education.
3. Education of both sexes.
4. Have regard to the practical side of life.

William Penn came to this country and early introduced the educational idea in his colony, and wherever Friends went schools were established. Friends began early to emigrate from the South and East into Indiana, after the territory was organized and opened for settlement. Those who settled the southern and western part of the state (within the limits of what is now known as Western Yearly Meeting) were mostly Friends from the South, particularly from North Carolina.

The first settlement of Friends made within the limits of the territory taken in consideration in this investigation was made about the time of the organization of the territory into a state, in Vigo County, a few miles south of the present location of Terre Haute, in the township of Prairieton. The Friends' meeting was probably the first church organized in the township, and its first meetings were held in 1818 or 1819 in a log house built for a winter school. This was known as the "Honey Creek Meeting of Friends," and a monthly meeting was established; but the neighborhood was broken up by a division in the church on account of the Hicksite separation, about 1830, and Friends' work was abandoned in this vicinity.

In the meantime the pioneer families, mostly from North Carolina, began to arrive in Parke County and settle in what is now known as Penn Township, named by them in honor of William Penn. The settlers began to arrive as early as 1823, but the greatest number arrived in 1824 and 1825, while the first settlement of the county did not take place before 1819 or 1820. Among those early Friends' families were the Rubotoms, Silers, Pickards, Reynoldses, Kellys and Newlins. The first Friends' meeting held in Parke County was held at the home of Adam Siler, in 1825. In 1826, a log meeting house, twenty feet square, was put up, and a request was made for a preparative meeting to be set up from Honey Creek Monthly Meeting. The request was granted and the preparative meeting was established Sixth month 5th, 1826. In the work of felling timber, scoring and hewing the logs and hauling them to the building place, getting out the punch-ions for the floor and the boards for the roof, each one did his part, and Adam Siler, being the only one who had any money for his share, paid for the nails with which the clapboard roof was fastened on. This nailing on of boards was a luxury, however, seldom indulged in in those early days. The arrangement for heating the house consisted of a kind of pan scooped out of the ground, in the center of the building, in which charcoal was burned.

As was characteristic of Friends, as soon as the settlement was made, the question of a school began to be considered. In examining Friends' schools, one sees a gradual development in the system from the neighborhood subscription school of Friends in the early community up through the school under the care of the monthly meeting, and as the children obtained what these schools were able to give, a need was felt for higher education; as a result, academies, boarding schools and colleges were established, as the needs of the times called for them.

Bloomfield Monthly Meeting, the first Friends' monthly meeting established in Parke County, was established Twelfth month 1st, 1827, and in the minutes of Fifth month 1st, 1830, we find the first record of the subject of education being considered officially, and a committee was appointed "to take the subject in charge and endeavor to promote its progress as may to them appear most expedient, and report to the monthly meeting."

Ninth month 1st, 1830, the committee made its first report, as follows: "We have had the subject under consideration, and taking in view the situation of Friends, find that there are several schools within our limits composed of Friends' children and others, two of which are taught by teachers in membership, though none of them so situated as to admit of attending meetings in the middle of the week, and we further apprehend that Friends of Bloomfield Preparative Meeting are so situated as to admit of the establishment of one school entirely under the control of Friends and contiguous to the meeting. But as the matter does not seem to go on with satisfaction, we propose to the meeting to lay it over until another month for consideration." At the next monthly meeting the questions of putting education upon a solid basis and means for its promotion were discussed. The Monthly Meeting's Committee on Education made the following report, Eighth month 10th, 1831, which shows the first definite accomplishment of Friends' plans: "We have sensibly felt the difficulty in which a great many of the members are involved in giving their children a guarded education on account of their scattered situation, yet we have endeavored to pursue measures for the promotion of the object in view, and have progressed so far as to have one school established (in the neighborhood of Bloomfield) in accordance with the directions of our superior meetings, which we expect will go into operation shortly. There are several other neighborhoods in the verge of our monthly meeting, though not situated so as to admit of the establishment of schools under the direction and superintendence of the monthly meeting, in the limits of which there are a great many youth not in the way of receiving a guarded education, though mostly in circumstances sufficient, provided they could get it in their own neighborhoods. Signed on behalf of committee,

"JOSHUA NEWLIN,
"MARY MARSHALL."

The educational work of the church was, everything considered, well organized, there being yearly meetings, quarterly meetings and monthly meetings committees of education in charge of the work and working in harmony.

An extract from the reports of the committee shows about the attitude and the sentiment of the church in general with regard to the foundation for education: "The proper education and training of the children should be to every thinking mind a matter of serious moment. The starting point is at the home in the family circle around the firesides. Here it is that the principles of the Christian religion should be unfurled and brought to bear upon the young and tender mind.

Our peculiarities as a society, our doctrines and testimonies, should be early inculcated. This we look upon as an essential point, for most assuredly our future well being as a society depends upon it. We would, therefore, press upon the consideration of every parent the importance of more earnest dedication and faithfulness in this particular."

The committees were required by the church to be very guarded in the selection of teachers, and teachers were carefully watched to see that their walks in life, including dress and address, were in accordance with the ideas of the times. They were required to visit the schools at least once a month, if not oftener, and give such moral and religious advice as they thought proper, and the students were kept under the strictest rules, both as to personal appearance and conduct. The rules were approved by the church, and were frequently read to the school by the teacher "to stir up the infantile and youthful mind by way of remembrance." Hands and face must be kept clean, hair combed and nails neatly trimmed. There must be no whistling or loud noise going to and from school, but the trip must be made as quickly and quietly as possible, without any unnecessary delay. Any deviation in the cut of clothing would displace the teacher, unless he or she recanted, and all students must also conform to a certain uniform style of dress. The students were required to address their teacher as "tutor" or "tutress" in the early days; but all these now seeming peculiarities gradually gave way to more modern ideas. Yet as we look back to the careful, conscientious ideas of those early pioneer fathers and mothers (of the early West) we cannot but admire their carefulness in the protection they gave to the rising generation. The Bible was not only used then as a devotional book, but also as a text book, in which all that could must read in, as a class, each day and receive some instruction from the teacher. Students often learned and repeated a whole chapter at a time; and in some schools, one day each week was devoted to the scriptures alone.

For the support of primary and advanced education, monthly meeting school funds were early established and increased by voluntary contributions.

About 1860, Moses Kelly bequeathed to Bloomingdale Monthly Meeting a part of his property, amounting to about $200, to be used for the education of poor children belonging to Friends in the monthly meeting. Ira Mendenhall was appointed the first treasurer of this fund. The interest of this fund was applied in accordance with the terms of the gift, and after the monthly meeting school was discontinued the proceeds were applied toward helping pay the tuition of Friends' children, in indigent circumstances, in the Academy. This is the only special fund for educational purposes in connection with the common schools of which we find record.

"Our Red Brother and the Peace Policy of President Ulysses S. Grant." By Lowrie Tatum. With an introduction by Thomas C. Battey. Sixteen illustrations. Philadelphia: John C. Winston & Co. 1899.

The motive which led to the writing of this interesting volume was to record some of the facts and incidents connected with the well-known "Peace Policy"—or "Quaker Policy," as it is sometimes called—of President Grant toward the Indians.

Lowrie Tatum, well known to many readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, has not only given a sketch of the history of this humane policy, but has added personal experiences and observations, which are a valuable addition to the narrative.

The book, though somewhat discursive, is a trustworthy record of the labors of the Associated Executive Committee on Indian Affairs. It gives a history of the ten years' active work in co-operation with the United States Government (1869-1879) and of the missionary work to the present time.

The sixteen illustrations are all interesting, and those of the Indians are specially valuable from an historic point of view.

This record of an eye-witness and an actor in this unselfish philanthropic and Christian effort will always be of great worth. The aged author is to be congratulated on the completion of the volume, and he deserves the thanks of Friends for putting his knowledge of the subject into print and so preserving it for the future.

Lesson IX.

Eleventh month 26, 1899.

WOES OF INTEMPERANCE.

Prov. 23: 29-35.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging: and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise. Prov. 20: 1.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Eleventh mo. 20.—Woes of intemperance. Prov. 23: 29-35.

Third-day, Eleventh mo. 21.—God's judgement. Isa. 5: 8-16.

Fourth-day, Eleventh mo. 22.—Anger of the Lord. Isa. 5: 18-25.

Fifth-day, Eleventh mo. 23.—The mocker. Prov. 20: 1-11.

Sixth-day, Eleventh mo. 24.—Sudden destruction. Nahum 1: 1-10.

Seventh-day, Eleventh mo. 25.—Desolation. Isa. 24: 1-12.

First-day, Eleventh mo. 26.—His portion. Matt. 24: 42-51.

The Book of Proverbs is generally, without much thought, ascribed to Solomon. While there seems little doubt that he was the author of part of the book, the book itself distinctly shows that it is the product of different hands. See 22: 17; 24: 23; 30: 1; 31: 1. In chap. 25: 1 we are told that the collection which follows was made in the days of Hezekiah. It is evident that as is the case with the Psalms, the book of Proverbs is a collection of material composed by different authors, and at different times, with no thought of the material being brought together. The book as a whole is spoken of as the work of Solomon the great representative of wisdom; as the Psalms are loosely spoken of as the work of David, the great representative of sacred lyric poetry.

The book belongs to that class of Hebrew writings known as the wisdom literature. The other books in the Bible are Job, and Ecclesiastes; in the Apocrypha, the wisdom of Jesus the son of Sirach; and Ecclesiasticus. The "wise men" seem to have occupied a position between the "prophet" and the people; they are philosophical rather than spiritual; occupied with daily practical life rather than with the spiritual life. This does not mean that the spiritual was ignored; witness the magnificent description of the higher wisdom in Proverbs 1: 7-9, 18; but one cannot read the whole of the book and compare it with the book of Isaiah, for instance, and not feel that he is upon a lower plane. The present lesson is from the "Words of the Wise" (22: 17). These collections contain two striking poems; one upon drunkenness (the lesson) and one upon slothfulness (24: 30-34). Both these selections are among the most familiar parts of the Old Testament. The valuable teachings they embody are applicable to every age. It is a very noticeable fact as illustrating the freedom from anything like local or national prejudice that the name of Israel does not occur in the book. How the "wise men" were regarded by their contemporaries may be inferred from Jeremiah 18: 18.

The book of Proverbs was a text-book of the Scotch Covenanters, and of the early settlers of New England, and of the three or four generations following them.

It is to be feared that the book does not, at the present time, receive enough attention. It would be difficult to give in as few words such a vivid, truthful, picture of the "woes of intemperance" as that contained in the brief poem which has been chosen for our consideration.

Note.—The Revised Version is referred to throughout.

29. "Who hath woe?" Literally, "whose is Oh?" To whom does the expression of woe, of suffering, rightly belong? "Contention." Who lives in the atmosphere of continual bickering and quarreling? "Wounds without cause." It is not too much to give these words the widest signification—wounds of body, ill health, weakening of the mind; wounds of soul, shame, remorse, self-loathing. It is not necessary to give examples; they are all about most of us.

30. "They that tarry long at the wine; they that go to seek out mixed wine." Here is the answer to the questions which are asked in the first verse. Wine, of course, is here used to describe any drink which produces intoxication.

31. "When it is red." When it is attractive. "Goeth down smoothly." When it is pleasant to the taste. "Look not." Do not put thyself in the way of yielding to the temptation of sight or taste.

32. "At the last it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder." One has but to look around, or to read the daily papers, to be forced to acknowledge the truth of this saying of more than twenty centuries ago.

33. "Thine eyes shall behold strange things." The margin of the Revised Version gives "strange women." It seems rather more in accord with the context (see verses 27-28) to take this meaning. "Utter froward things." Self-respect being lost, looseness of life, looseness of language, impure thought, almost always follow.

34. A graphic description of the stupefaction which is the result of intemperance. "Lieth upon the top of a mast." A most striking illustration of the insecurity of the position of the drinker of intoxicating beverages. Such a one may think he is level-headed, and of sure hold, and steady eye; but when the storm comes he will be thrown down, and probably lost. A man may cross the Niagara River above the falls a hundred times, and yet the next time be drawn into the rapids and carried over the falls because he gets to fancy himself secure.

35. A further description of the effect of intoxication. "I will seek it yet again." Notwithstanding all his experiences the drunkard lays the blame not on the real instrument of his degradation, but on misfortune, "hard luck," bad times. It is the old story so often repeated that it seems marvelous that so many who are yet free do not heed the lesson.

To us, who are free, who loathe the degradation, who pity, and feel compassion for the poor victims, the questions are, What can we do to help the sufferers? What can be done to prevent others from falling victims?

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. "Consider thyself, lest thou also be tempted."
2. Total abstinence is the only path of absolute safety.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR ELEVENTH MONTH TWENTY-SIXTH, 1899.

OUR RETURN FOR THE LORD'S BENEFITS.

Psalms 116: 12-19.

(A Thanksgiving Meeting.)

Second-day, Eleventh mo. 20.—To God. Psalms 100: 1-5.

Third-day, Eleventh mo. 21.—For blessings to the individual. Ps. 145: 1-21.

Fourth-day, Eleventh mo. 22.—For blessings to the church.

Psalms 48: 1-8; 87: 1-7.

Fifth-day, Eleventh mo. 23.—For blessings to the nation. Psalms 124: 1-8.

Sixth-day, Eleventh mo. 24.—By word. Psalms 107: 1-9.

Seventh-day, Eleventh mo. 25.—By life. Psalms 15: 1-5.

From a psalm which may be termed "the convalescent's psalm," since it is evidently a thanksgiving upon recovery from sickness, a few verses are taken that are intended to encourage us to a like spirit of thanksgiving. The proclamations of our president and governors of states seek to impress upon us the duty of thanksgiving for national blessings as well as for individual benefits received, and the first question we may ask ourselves is whether our own hearts join heartily in thanksgiving, or are we more inclined to summon the shades of night to darken the light and gladness of this national holiday? There is no difficulty in finding the shadows if we look for them. There are shadows national, ecclesiastical, municipal, individual; shadows in the community, in our own churches, in our own homes—and we can scarcely tell at times whether the day is dawning or the night is coming on. But let us make this a day of thanksgiving, not a time for jeremiads or universal degeneracy.

It is a time for thanksgiving from the standpoint of comparison. Read history until you can rightly measure to-day with the reign of Nero or even of Marcus Aurelius. Measure to-day with the end of the first thousand years of the Christian era, when not simply the nations, but also the church, were utterly and absolutely enslaved to sin, and corruption even to putrefaction reigned supreme. These are days of a blessed millenium compared with times such as those.

If it can be proven, though I doubt it, that our colonial days, or the first half of our present century, were better times than the present, then it must be remembered that we are confronted with conditions to-day that did not exist at that time, and that temporary defeat, or even the disruption of existing institutions, by no means proves confirmed degeneracy.

There is great cause for thanksgiving in the events of the year, even though it is going out with the horrors of war daily enacted in Africa and the far East. Let us thank God for the nations that are at peace; for the international disputes that have been settled by peaceful methods or referred to such methods, for they have been more in number than those submitted to the arbitrament of the sword. Let us be thankful for the conference at The Hague. It is far more indicative of the sentiment of our times than the war in the Philippines or the Transvaal.

Let us be thankful in our own land and in its great cities for all that shows the widespread power of the name of Christ. Here, in New York, with all its wretched government and brutal, terrible evil, how much, after all, there is to be thankful for! There are hundreds of organizations and thousands of people wholly devoted to Christian service for others. There are unhappy homes whose sorrows make angels weep, but there are thousands more where Christ rules and his peace abides. There are more people in the churches every week than there are in the theatres, even though we have a vast unchurched population.

Let us be thankful for all the forces that have in any way moulded our lives for Christ. They have shaped us with their thousand invisible hands. They have come to us in Christian ancestry, in Christian institutions, within whose influence our lives have been formed, and directly from God himself in his own touch upon our hearts. We share to-day in the benefits of Moses' revelations in the Mount, in Isaiah's seraphic visions, in David's inspired songs, in Paul's heroism for Christian missions, in John's enraptured visions and fulness of love. Let us thank God to-day that our sorest trials are revealing to us more of the grace of our Lord. If at one moment we are tempted to cry with the Psalmist, "O, God, why hast thou forsaken me?" "All thy waves and thy billows have gone over me," yet we are led by his grace to say, "I will fear no evil, for thou art with me."

Then let us hold our fast some other day. For this day let "the joy of the Lord be our strength."

THE INDIANA ENDEAVOR CONVENTION.

The Endeavorers of Richmond, Ind., are making preparations for a great State Convention, to be held there at end of present month. Elwood O. Ellis, clerk of Indiana Yearly Meeting, and pastor of South Eighth Street Friends' Church, Richmond, is chairman of the Committee of Arrangements, and under his efficient leadership all things are moving with clock-like precision toward the hour of the gathering of the delegates. The convention is to be held in the Friends' Yearly Meeting House, which will accommodate about two thousand people, and affords ample room besides for receptions, committee rooms, etc. The list of speakers includes Governor Mount, of Indiana; Dr. Cornelius Woelfkin, of Brooklyn; Miss Kate Haus, of St. Louis; Rev. Frances E. Clark, and many Indiana Endeavorers and pastors. The song services will be in charge of P. P. Bilhous. One-fare rates have been secured on all Indiana railroads.

The greatest thing a man can do for his Heavenly Father is to be kind to some of His other children.—Henry Drummond.

News from the Field.

Benjamin F. Trueblood, of Boston, and M. M. Binford, of Brooklyn, are in attendance at Baltimore Yearly Meeting, which began its sessions on the 10th inst.

Allen C. Thomas, of Haverford, Pa., is clerk of Baltimore Yearly Meeting.

We are informed on good authority that S. Edgar Nicholson, author of the Indiana State Liquor Law, and chairman of the last Indianapolis Conference, is about to move from his home, Kokomo, Indiana, to Baltimore.

John H. Dillingham, editor of the Philadelphia "Friend," and Inazo Nitobe, a well-known Japanese Friend, attended Baltimore Yearly Meeting.

A large and interesting Tea-Meeting was held at Twelfth Street meeting house, in Philadelphia, on the evening of the 6th. After supper was served, the company gathered in the meeting-room to listen to a consideration of the subject "Peace or War?" A valuable and carefully prepared paper by Elizabeth Joliffe, was read by Sarah Cadbury and brief addresses were made by Isaac Sharpless, Rufus M. Jones and John B. Garrett.

Elizabeth Bean, mother of Joel Bean, passed away at her home in San Jose, the thirty-first of last month, at the venerable age of 97. She was born in New Hampshire.

Edward C. and Amy D. Cook have withdrawn from their Indian Mission work and have moved into the limits of Stanwood Meeting, their addresses being McLouth, Kansas.

Rebecca Morgan, of Emporia, Kansas, has temporarily removed to Chicago. Her present address is 6020 Jefferson Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

In the death of Willet Dorland, of Whittier, California, a prominent and very useful Friend, and a genuine Christian man has departed from the ranks of service. He was a man of good ability and of good education. For more than twenty years he sat at the head of Chicago Meeting. When the Publishing Association of Friends was first organized, he was selected as business editor of the "Christian Worker," and he was the founder and first editor of the "Friends' Bible School Quarterly." He was one of the pioneers of Salem Quarterly Meeting, in Iowa, and he was the first clerk of Iowa Yearly Meeting. He went to Whittier, California, in 1887, and was the first clerk of Whittier Quarterly Meeting and during these last years of his full life, has been a valuable member of this youngest yearly meeting. He was twice married; to Abigail Bedell, and in 1895, to Margaret B. Cates, formerly of Vassalboro, Maine. He was a recorded minister of the Gospel.

Joseph S. Elkinton writes, Tenth month 31st, 1899, from Winnipeg, Manitoba, that the Commissioner of Immigration, Wm. T. McCreary, had been on a visit to the Doukhobor villages in Assiniboia before he and Wm. B. Harvey arrived. The general condition of the colonists was on the whole fairly good, but that food would need to be supplied them at once if they were to subsist at all during the winter, without suffering from insufficient nutrition.

He had bought up enough cabbages to make a car of sour-kraut, and potatoes, with onions, were being sent them in quantity.

The car of food and clothing started from Philada two weeks ago, had not arrived and may not for another fortnight, but one out of the three cars of corn-meal, bought in Iowa, was reported at Winnipeg.

It is very desirable that all the shipments made should be forwarded promptly, so that Jos. S. Elkinton may personally direct their distribution, as considerable care has been taken to make up assorted lots designed for each of the villages.

A second car load is thus being collected, with the hope of getting it off within two weeks.

Some 300 blankets have been bought for each shipment. Many more are wanted, and leather, with linseed oil, as a substitute for animal fats. If funds are placed at the disposal of the treasurer, Wm. Evans, 252 South Front Street, Philadelphia, these will be purchased and promptly forwarded.

The Sick Diet Fund is in charge of Dr. Anna P. Sharpless, 3926 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, and was drawn upon for the groceries shipped by the last consignment from Philadelphia. Another $1,000 will be required for the same use.

Clothing has and will be received, but as the time is short before the winter closes in, and the Doukhobors are so skilful in making up their own garments, the raw materials are much more desirable. A donation has been solicited with each purchase and generally obtained. Goods should be marked, "For Doukhobors," and in care Jos. S. and Thos. Elkinton, 817 Mifflin Street, Philadelphia.

It is estimated, at a conservative figure, that $50,000 will be necessary to supply their needs during the coming eight months, and about half that amount has been raised.

If we had funds to buy as many more cows—now there is only one to each village—and several more yoke of oxen, with plows, their prospects for self-support would be brighter.

The Commissioner (W. T. McC.) accompanied J. S. E. and W. B. H., with 300 of the settlers, to their new home in Prince Albert.

Their garments looked the worse for the wear of the past several months, and the prospect of braving the winter in that latitude, with no more covering for their feet than some had, appealed strongly for more leather. Five hundred dollars invested in this way would be a veritable "God-send."

A most agreeable interpreter was also selected by the commissioner. He had come from Russia ten years since on a leave of six months' absence, and wisely concluded to commit his fortunes to America henceforth.

It is particularly gratifying to learn that Prince Hilkooff did not risk being sent to Siberia by returning to Russia, but is now with his family in Switzerland.

The expressions of gratitude on the part of these patient sufferers is truly touching—they have never asked for any favor or comfort save the return of their exiled brethren.

The utter absence of selfishness in their daily intercourse with each other is one of their most conspicuous traits, and their fidelity to conviction, in the least as well as greater testimony, a lesson to all christendom.

JOSEPH ELKINTON.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING.

West Branch, Iowa.—Springdale Quarterly Meeting of Ministry and Oversight met at 2 p.m. on the 3d, with a good attendance. The Spirit of God was manifest in our midst and in our hearts. The ministry of the Word was in the demonstration of the spirit and of power. In the business session of the meeting we were introduced into a feeling of deep sympathy and travail of soul for our young ministers, whom we have set apart and sent to the needy fields. Letters of greeting were sent to them. A deep feeling of solicitation filled our hearts because of the introduction and fostering in our Christian Colleges of games which have a tendency to lead away from Christ and into the paths of sin as they are indulged in in this day of out-reaching for worldly honor. God save us from the works of the children of darkness and sin! The ministry in the quarterly meeting at large by Jesse Lloyd and Morris Lemmon was blessed by the Lord. Jesse Lloyd will remain with us for a few days.

J. Y. HOOVER.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING.

On the 28th, Knightstown Monthly Meeting was favored with the company of Luke Woodard and wife; and on the 29th, he preached with great power to a large audience.

A. M. Kenworthy has granted liberty to labor for the Master in Western and Indiana Yearly Meetings, and was engaged the past week in Kokomo Quarterly Meeting.

Dr. Enoch Pritchard, of Georgetown, Ill., in the course of travel, had good service at Maple Grove, Fortville, and Raysville, the last week in Tenth month.

Samuel Province, of Cleveland, Ohio, spent the past week in Knightstown offering books in the interest of Malone Training School

NEW YORK YEARLY MEETING.

South Starksboro.—A Communication from Samuel Miles in THE AMERICAN FRIEND, Tenth month Twelfth, mentions Edwin J. Meader and wife as "ministers." It should read "Edwin J. Meader, minister, his wife an elder."

ELVIRA M. MEADER.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING.

Grand River Quarterly Meeting was held the 3d, 4th and 5th of Eleventh month at Miami, Indian Territory. Every session was crowned with a blessing. On Sabbath, at 11 a.m., Elwood Haworth preached an excellent sermon that was full of Spirit and power, after which there were testimonies to the blessing of the Lord by English, German, French, Norwegian, Welsh, and Americans, besides Modoc and Ottawa Indians, and in the evening the house was crowded. We had present with us the chiefs of the Peoria and Wyandotte tribes of Indians. To the Lord be all the praise.

JEREMIAH HUBBARD.

NEW ENGLAND YEARLY MEETING.

The Friends' Bible School at Worcester, observed Rally Day on Tenth month, 29th, when a program of twenty-one numbers was rendered. The exercises began with the hymn "Faith is the Victory," sung by the school. This was followed by the roll-call, to which each member of the school responded by a Scripture text, responsive reading of the lesson and a five minute talk on the same, recitations and music. Near the close, Samuel A. Arnold gave the early history of the Sabbath school at Worcester, from which it was learned that the school was established about thirty-six years ago. Under the head of Missionary Work of the Sabbath school, Sarah J. Swift mentioned the benevolent objects toward which the school has contributed in the past. A recitation, entitled "Borrioboola Gha," given by Edith A. Roberts, told of the urgent need of missionary work close by our own doors, as well as in foreign fields. Each class gave a text in concert, or by some one member selected to give a text for the class. Several availed themselves of the opportunity afforded by the one-half minute speeches, and then came the closing hymn, "Blest be the Tie," by the school. The occasion proved an enjoyable, and we trust a profitable, one to the older people as well as to the children.

CALIFORNIA YEARLY MEETING.

Report of the delegates to Pasadena Quarterly Meeting.—The delegates to the quarterly meeting at Long Beach, report a good attendance. The meeting opened at the hour with song and prayer service, after which our aged friend, John Bond, one of the fraternal delegates from Whittier Quarterly Meeting, spoke in a very earnest and tender manner from Isaiah 35:8, "A highway shall be there, and a way which shall be called the way of Holiness." He aptly illustrated by his own religious experience and that of others the great importance of living in the way of holiness that we may be fitted and prepared to do the work faithfully and practically that our hands find to do, and thus fulfill our mission in the Lord's vineyard, and His church, while our day is going by. His earnest exhortation was pertinent and touching and was followed by others on the same line. The meeting then adjourned for lunch, which was amply provided by the resident Friends, and the social occasion was both enjoyable and profitable for all.

The meeting again assembled for business at 1 o'clock. Quite a number of fraternal delegates from Whittier Quarterly Meeting were very acceptably present and took part in the meeting. Thomas Armstrong then called the attention of Friends to the recent decease of our dear friend, Willet Dorland, and a short memorial service was held, in which, by Thomas Armstrong and many others, his traits of character as a well-founded Christian man, were brought out. His life-long services for the church and his Divine Master; as an efficient clerk in various capacities; as a minister of the Gospel of Christ; as a person of much ability and perseverance in the various departments of the Sabbath school work; as an editor of the "Christian Worker;" as a respected, worthy and conscientious member of the Iowa Legislature. In all these positions his good judgment, sound discretion and uncompromising integrity of Christian character were his distinguishing traits.

In the review of this life a deep feeling of solemnity overspread the meeting and a desire to follow him as he followed Christ.

Rhoda M. Hare reported very favorably on the Missionary work done at Llewellyn, three miles from Long Beach. A series of meetings had recently been held, and also much pastoral and house to house visiting in their homes has been accomplished by our friend, Josiah Hall, with good results. These reports quickened the sympathy and unity of the meeting in the labors of these Friends, and a collection was taken for that work.

SHIPLEY LITERARY SOCIETY.

Cincinnati, Ohio.—The first semi-annual meeting of the Shipley Literary Society was held in Friends' meeting house, N. W. Cor. 8th and Mound street, Sixth-day evening, Eleventh month 3d, 1899. Notwithstanding the disagreeable weather, the meeting house was taxed to its capacity. The house was tastefully decorated with the colors of the society, which stood out in pleasant contrast with the palms and potted plants, which helped to make up the decoration. The program was as follows: Scripture reading from 8th chapter of Proverbs by John C. Naegle, followed with prayer by J. Lindley Spicer. President Frank R. Gusweiler delivered the address of the evening and was roundly applauded for his effort. Following was a most interesting and instructive address on "Self-Education," by Caleb W. Shipley. In conclusion Mr. Shipley, on behalf of Murray Shipley's family, presented the society with an exquisite portrait of the late Murray Shipley. This beautiful and greatly desired present was formally accepted by our president. A selection was then rendered by the Gusweiler Bros., which was followed with the debate of the evening, "Resolved, That Capital Punishment be Abolished." Jos. G. Gusweiler and Erwin J. Schmick defended the affirmative while A. W. McLaren and Leslie F. Kephart looked after the negative side. The judges were Robt. B. Henley, O. F. Dwyer and E. V. Hall. The debaters acquitted themselves with credit. Another selection was rendered, after which the judges reported. The concluding number was a well-rendered recitation from "Ben-Hur," by Walter P. Schmick.

ABANDONED IT.

For the Old-Fashioned Coffee Was Killing.

"I always drank coffee with the rest of the family, for it seemed as if there was nothing for breakfast if we did not have it on the table.

"I had been troubled some time with my heart, which did not feel right. This trouble grew worse steadily.

"Some times it would beat fast and at other times very slowly, so that I would hardly be able to do work for an hour or two after breakfast, and if I walked up a hill, it gave me a severe pain.

"I had no idea of what the trouble was until a friend suggested that perhaps it might be caused by coffee drinking. I tried leaving off the coffee and began drinking Potsum Cereal Food Coffee. The change came quickly. I am now glad to say that I am entirely well of the heart trouble, and attribute the cure to leaving off coffee and the use of Potsum Cereal Food Coffee.

"A number of my friends have abandoned the old-fashioned coffee and have taken up with Potsum, which they are using steadily. There are some people that make Potsum very weak and tasteless, but if it is boiled long enough, according to directions, it is a very delicious beverage. We have never used any of the old-fashioned coffee since it was first started in our house."

Died.

BAILEY.—Elma Bailey, daughter of Moses E. and Melvina C. Bailey, died at Friendsville, Tenn., Tenth month 23d, 1899, aged 28 years and 10 months. Under careful Christian training, she was early brought to accept Christ as her Savior, and for many years, has evinced an interest in Christian work. She will be especially missed in her home, Sabbath school and Christian Endeavor.

CARY.—Elizabeth K. Cary, wife of Wm. Cary, and daughter of Samuel and Susannah Mendenhall, of Indiana, died at her home at Myrtal Creek, Oregon, on Tenth month 13th, 1899, aged 50 years and 2 months. She was a life-long Friend, but on account of her health and living in a new country she was deprived of active participation. During her long affliction she manifested a kind and Christian disposition.

DAVIS.—Jonah Mace Davis died at his home, Richmond, Ind., Ninth month 15th, 1899, aged 75 years. His life was full of service and usefulness. He was for some years a successful teacher, and always a helpful Bible school teacher. He was an efficient elder in the church and was often chosen clerk of monthly and quarterly meetings.

FELLOWS.—Price H., son of Price and Rachel Fellows, was born in Randolph county, Indiana, and died Eighth month 12th, in the 66th year of his age. He united with Friends early in life, and had for many years been an esteemed member of Kokomo Monthly Meeting. He was a loving husband and father, an affectionate brother, a loyal friend, a respected and useful citizen, and a concerned and efficient worker in the church.

FRENCH.—Ezra French, son of Barzilla and Mary French, died at his home at Damascus, Ohio, Ninth month 22d, 1899, aged 78 years and 10 months. He was a lifetime member of Damascus Meeting, a man of meek and quiet spirit, loved and honored by all who knew his trustful, cheerful life as he walked among us, esteeming others better than himself, and faithfully doing the seeming little things for the advancement of those about him, that sum up a great life in the end. His wife and three children survive him, the only daughter, Dr. M. Isabella French, having gone, almost two years ago, to Nanking, China, as medical missionary, sent out by Ohio Yearly Meeting's Board, and bearing the glad benediction of her father, then in feeble health.

GRIFFITH.—On the 9th of Ninth month, 1899, at his home in Springfield, Mo., James H. Griffith, a life-long and valued member of the religious Society of Friends. This dear Friend was a refugee from his home near Winchester, Va., during the Civil War, because of his loyal sentiments—perhaps too fully expressed. He was a man of genial, upright character, and was in his 88th year when he died.

HANSON.—E. Adelbert Hanson, son of Thomas and Emma Hanson, died Sixth month 21st, 1899, in the 19th year of his age. He was an industrious, energetic and self-sacrificing young man, who sought the best in life.

KNOWLES.—In Rollin, Michigan, Ninth month 10th, 1899, Francis Grant Knowles, son of Frank and Harriet Knowles, aged nearly 15 months.

LEWIS.—Laura, wife of Tennyson Lewis, died at their home in Anderson, Indiana, Ninth month 22d, 1899, in the 39th year of her age. She was a Friend by deep conviction, and a faithful and efficient laborer for the Master.

MEREDITH.—Jesse Meredith, son of James and Mary Meredith, died at his home in New Sharon, Iowa, Tenth month 18th, 1899, aged 74 years. He was a birthright member of Friends, and was converted when a child, and during his life, lived and worked for his Master.

PARKER.—Martha A. Parker, a member of Smyrna Monthly Meeting, Iowa, died at the home of her daughter, Eva Brower, Tenth month, 25th, aged 61 years, 10 months and 4 days. She had been unable to speak since about Christmas, 1898. We have good assurance she has gone home to be with the redeemed.

PEARSON.—Stanley A. Pearson died at Southland College, Helena, Ark., Ninth month 23d, 1899, aged 36 years. He was a faithful and devoted Christian, actively engaged in the Lord's work and in the elevation of humanity. He was president of Southland College.

PEMBERTON.—Robert Barclay Pemberton, Marshalltown, Iowa, died Tenth month, 8th, 1899, aged 28 years. He was a graduate of Penn College and had devoted himself to educational work.

RANDALL.—Minta E., wife of Irvin Randall, died Ninth month 30th, 1899, in her 27th year. She was a faithful member of Rose Hill Monthly Meeting, Kansas.

SHARPLESS.—Departed this life, at her home in West Grove, Chester county, Pa., on Tenth month 13th, 1899, Ruthanna E. Sharpless, wife of the late Nathan J. Sharpless, in her 82d year. Her gentle spirit seemed ready when the summons came to depart.

TURNER.—Eleanor C. Turner, youngest child of Archibald and Ann Edwards, died at the home of her daughter, in Harveysburg, Ohio, Second month 5th, 1899, in her 77th year. She became a widow in Sixth month of 1862. Amidst all the deep afflictions through which she was called to pass, her faith never wavered. She was a consistent member of Harveysburg Friends' Meeting, having a birthright membership.

VAIL.—Isaac M. Vail, son of William and Lydia Ann Vail, was born Ninth month 6th, 1831, and died at his home in Portland, Indiana, aged 68 years, one month and 21 days. Dr. Vail was converted in the spring of 1876; since that time he has lived a consistent Christian life, as a member with Friends.

WALES.—Thomas M. Wales, son of Isaac and Ruth Welch Wales, died at his home in Harveysburg, Ohio, Ninth month 15th, aged 86 years. He was a "Hicksite" Friend, but for several years had been a faithful attender of all services of Orthodox Friends, and was ever ready to assist the church in any way that would promote good.

WALES.—Eliza Nedry Wales, daughter of James and Lydia Nedry, and wife of Thomas Wales, died at her home in Harveysburg, Ohio, First month 12th, 1899. She gave herself unreservedly to her Saviour, and chose to make her church home with the Friends, to whose principles she was firmly attached.

WHEELER.—Ruth C. Wheeler, daughter of Joshua and Rachel Anderson, and wife of David Wheeler, died at her home, Westminster, Guilford County, N. C., Sixth month 26th, 1899, aged 77 years, 11 months and 11 days. She was a loved member of Deep River Monthly Meeting and for a third of a century an esteemed Elder.

WHITE.—William F. White died suddenly near Searsboro, Iowa, Tenth month 19th, 1899, aged 54 years. He was a consistent member with Friends.

WOODY.—Died at Paton, Iowa, Fourth month 20th, 1899, Enos S. Woody, aged 67 years, a member and elder of Paton Monthly Meeting, Iowa.

BOOK REVIEWS.

"Remember Jesus Christ." By Robert E. Speer. Cloth, 16mo, long. pp. 220. Price, 75 cents. A volume of addresses at the Northfield Summer Bible Conferences, here collected together and published under direction of the author. They are characterized throughout by the spiritual insight, accuracy and intensity of the author. No young man in America touches more deeply, carefully, and yet widely, the hearts of American students than does Mr. Speer.

"The Great Appeal." By James G. K. McClure, of Lake Forest University. 12mo, cloth. pp. 131. Price, 75 cents. A beautiful series of addresses rightly characterized by the word "appeal." It is the divine appeal to the intellect, heart, conscience, memory, imagination, self-interests and will. The argument is lucid, the illustrations well chosen, and the appeals tender and heart-searching. The book is suggestive for pastors and evangelists. The above books can be obtained of the Fleming H. Revell Co., New York and Chicago.

News and Events.

An agreement has been reached between England and Germany, subject to the approval of the United States, by which the Samoan Islands, with the exception of Tutuila and the adjacent islands, will become German territory. Germany cedes to Great Britain the Tongo Islands, Savage Island, and the two easterly islands in the Solomon group. Germany is thus given absolutely 639,720 acres of Samoa. Tutuila, which will fall to the share of the United States, is only 32,000 acres in area, and, as we have already possessed the only valuable part of the island, Pago Pago harbor, under formal treaty, for twenty years, it is difficult to see where any advantage lies in the division to the United States. It is reported that the Administration will offer no objection to the agreement arrived at by the two other powers.

Three transports have arrived in South Africa, carrying the vanguard of the army corps with which General Buller is to attempt the relief of General White's army, hemmed in at Ladysmith. By forcing the British to fight on his own terms, General Joubert has gained a considerable advantage. General Buller, it is admitted, will abandon his intention of marching north from the Cape through the Orange Free State to Pretoria and Johannesburg. His army corps was expected to proceed in such force that there was to be a triumphal procession to the Boer strongholds, which were to be razed to the ground. He is compelled to turn aside to attack the enemy on grounds of his own choosing, and in combatting Joubert's forces and gaining an entrance to White's beleaguered army, he has no light task. The country is rough and mountainous. The bridges, passes, heights and every strategic point have been seized, fortified and manned. The Boers, it is thought, are now preparing for a desperate onslaught upon Ladysmith before the reinforcements can come to White's relief. The British at Mafeking and Kimberley are still besieged by the Boers, and brief advices state that fierce attacks have recently been made by the enemy, but repulsed.

The elections of the past week passed off with the usual amount of interest displayed in years just preceding presidential elections. In Ohio, where a triangular fight for governor had been hotly waged between Nash, Republican; McLean, Democrat, and Jones, Independent, a decisive victory was scored for the Republican candidate. Coming from the Chief Executive's own state, this is looked upon by Mark Hanna and others as a vindication of President McKinley's Philippine policy. In Nebraska the result of the election was a strong endorsement of Wm. J. Bryan. Notwithstanding some losses in Greater New York, the New York Legislature has had its Republican majority increased. Croker has been vastly pleased by the defeat of Mazet, Republican, for Assemblyman, and is more firmly entrenched than before. Pennsylvania's verdict is a victory for the McKinley administration, and for the Quay machine; Iowa is Republican; Massachusetts remains Republican with a somewhat reduced majority. In Maryland the Democrats had a plurality of 11,000 for Smith, the candidate for governor, and will have nearly a unanimous vote in the House. In Kentucky the election was close, and the ballots have not been finally counted.

Royal saves also because it always makes fine, light, sweet food; never wastes good flour; butter and eggs.

More important still is the saving in health. Royal Baking Powder adds anti-dyspeptic qualities to the food.

General Parades, a former commander in the army of ex-President Andrade, who had refused the demand made upon him by General Cipriano Castro and the de facto authorities to surrender the town, even when this was reinforced by the request of the British, American, French, German and Dutch commanders, surrendered on the morning of the 12th, after a terrible battle. The city is ruined and devastated, and it is estimated that upwards of 650 persons were killed or wounded during the fighting.

The wedding of Admiral Dewey to Mildred Hazen took place in Washington on the 9th. The bride is a Catholic, and in order to consummate the marriage, it was necessary to secure a special dispensation. Admiral Dewey is a member of the Episcopal Church. They will live in Washington.

HE GOT FORTY CENTS.

The old circuit preachers did not preach for money. The "salaries" of pioneer evangelists a hundred years later—and even now—make a small figure in the history of their work. A veteran minister gives in the "Christian Oracle" a sample of his youthful experience in Kentucky, among the hills and woods of the "Dark and Bloody Ground."

While a student at the Lexington Bible College he met an old mountaineer preacher, known familiarly everywhere as "Uncle Jim," who proposed that they should spend a vacation together "crying in the wilderness."

"You lighten and I'll thunder," said the old man, "and we'll bring 'em in."

They went to the wildest country they could find, visited the scattered inhabitants, and called a "protracted meeting." Beginning in a small and rarely used "church," the services became so thronged that on the last day, which was Sunday, the assemblies were held out-of-doors, and the preachers talked to two thousand people, seated on stumps, logs and fence-rails. At the close "Uncle Jim" made an appeal in behalf of his young colleague.

"Brethren," said he, "we have had with us in this happy meeting our young brother from the Lexington Bible College, and we have all enjoyed his logical discourses. It is his desire, brethren, to return to school to complete his education, and you all know, beloved, that man cannot get an education without money. Our brother has labored for us faithfully; the laborer is worthy of his hire, and I am sure you will all be most happy to contribute something toward compensating him for his services. We cannot pass around the hat among these stumps and logs, so just come up, brethren, after the benediction, and hand the money to me."

The "young brother" waited at a respectful distance while the congregation melted away. At last Uncle Jim came to him with a thoughtful face, and something in his hand.

"Well, my son," he said, after a pause, "Brother Jones, candidate for the state senate, gave me forty cents. You take a quarter and I'll keep fifteen cents, and maybe it'll pay our toll."

"Poor preach, poor pay," laughed the student.

"No," said Uncle Jim, "the truth is, none of these mountain folks have any money. They live on sang, snakeroot and huckleberries, and not one in ten of 'em sees five dollars in a year."

The young man preached through his vacation, rode in all two hundred miles (reducing by fifty pounds the flesh of his borrowed horse), wore out a thirty-seven-dollar suit of clothes, and received in contri-

WELL DONE, BUT NOT WORTH DOING.

A Norwegian named Bella Kutridg has just accomplished a difficult task to which he has dedicated four years of his life. Four years ago, when he was eighty-one, and in order to find an occupation, at once intelligent and useful for his leisure time, he set to work to write as many words on a postal card as it would hold. He made it a point not to use a magnifying glass or spectacles, but to use common pens, and to write plain. He wrote one thousand words easily, and by interlineations the number of words increased to three thousand, and afterward to six thousand. At the end of the third year, by writing smaller, he managed to get twenty thousand words on the postal card. Then he resolved even to surpass this feat. Having read a novel, he found that it contained forty-six thousand words. The indefatigable old gentleman thereupon determined to copy it on a postal card. He worked at this task three months, and attained his object. He is now eighty-five years of age, and he thanks Providence for having allowed him to finish his task. He can sleep in peace; his work in this world is finished.—"Independence Belge."

THE DOGS OF A FRENCH PRISON.

We seem to hear the baying of deep-mouthed, great fierce dogs—shepherd's dogs, as one might say, since their office is to guard the sheep for slaughter. Several of these faithful canine animals were employed in the prison; but one of them, named Ravage, was distinguished for ferocity and sagacity. Jailers slept at night near the courtyard, and Ravage kept watch there with his master. Some prisoners attempted to escape by boring a hole in the wall.

Their chief danger of detection consisted in the watchfulness of Ravage; but, strangely enough, he was silent. His silence was explained on the following morning by an assignat of one hundred sous, which was tied to his tail, together with a little note, on which was written, "One may win over Ravage with a bill of one hundred cents and a stew of mutton feet." The depraved dog walked about publishing his own infamy, and was hailed with shouts of laughter. He was immured, as a punishment, for some hours in a dungeon, and emerged with an air of deep humiliation.—"The Quarterly Review."

THE QUIET.

It seems to me I'd like to go
Where bells don't ring, nor whistles blow,
Nor clocks don't strike, nor gongs sound,
And I'd have stillness all around.
Nor real stillness, but just the trees'
Low whisperings, or the hum of bees.
Or brooks' faint babbling over stones
In strangely, softly tangled tones.
Or maybe a cricket or katydid,
Or the songs of birds in the hedges hid,
Or just some such sweet sounds as these
To fill a tired heart with ease.
If 'tweren't for sight and sound and smell,
I'd like a city pretty well,
But when it comes to getting rest
I like the country lots the best.
Sometimes it seems to me I must
Just quit the city's din and dust
And get out where the sky is blue;
And say, now, how does it seem to you?

THE INFLUENCE OF IDEALS.

We grow like the thing toward which we strive. The vision in our heart fashions our character. Our longings make us. Lowell puts this truth well:

The thing we long for, that we are
For one transcendent moment,
Before the present poor and bare
Can make its sneering comment.

Still, through our paltry stir and strife,
Glow down the wished ideal,
And longing molds in clay what life
Carves in the marble real;

To let the new life in, we know,
Desire must ope the portal;
Perhaps the longing to be so
Helps make the soul immortal.

Longing is God's fresh heavenward will
With our poor earthward striving;
We quench it that we may be still Content with merely living.

CURE OF UNBELIEF.

My answer to the question how we are to meet the unbelief of our times is this: Preach Christ. * * * Let us preach Christ, and we shall find that He carries conviction where our logic fails. Let us dwell on the love which moved Him to descend from His eternal throne and to become incarnate; upon His eagerness to seek and to save that which was lost; upon the tears which He wept over Jerusalem; upon the free mercy that He showed to publicans and harlots. Let men see Him hanging on the cross, and let the glory He had forsaken blend with all the anguish and desolation and shame. Let them have the mystery interpreted by His own words, that His blood was "shed for the remission of sins." Let us constantly reiterate that "He is the propitiation for the sins of the world;" that He died, "the just for the unjust," to "bring us to God." And while men are filled with wonder and fear and gratitude and hope, be sure of it, all thought of associating their own penitence or their own well-doing with that one perfect sacrifice will vanish, and the heart, if not the intellect, will exclaim that, since Christ died to save us, His death must be the solitary and adequate ground of our salvation, and when

THE QUINTESSENCE OF POLITENESS.

Among the Japanese, as R. B. Peery says in "The Gist of Japan," forms of politeness are, in many instances, carried to a ridiculous extreme.

When you are invited to a dinner, the invitation will carefully state that no special preparation will be made for the occasion. At the beginning of the meal the hostess will apologize for presuming to set before you such mean, dirty food, and will declare that she has nothing whatever for you to eat, although she will doubtless have a feast fit for a king. Even if it should not be good, you must praise it extravagantly.

The greetings between friends are sometimes very amusing. I have often overheard such conversations as the following. Two men meet in the street, bow very low, and begin as follows:—

A. "I have not had the pleasure of hanging myself in your honorable eyes for a long time."

B. "I was exceedingly rude last time I saw you."

A. "No; it was surely I who was rude. Please excuse me."

B. "How is your august health?"

A. "Very good, thanks to your kind assistance."

B. "Is the august lady, your honorable wife, well?"

A. "Yes, thank you; the lazy old woman is quite well."

B. "And how are your princely children?"

A. "A thousand thanks for your kind interest. The noisy, dirty little brats are well, too."

B. "I am now living on a small back street, and my house is awfully small and dirty; but if you can endure it, please honor me with a visit."

A. "I am overcome with thanks, and will surely ascend to your honorable residence, and impose my uninteresting self upon your hospitality."

B. "I will now be very impolite and leave you."

A. "If that is so, excuse me. Sayonara."

JENNY LIND AND GRISI.

We have recently read a beautiful incident. Jenny Lind and Grisi were rivals for popular favor in London. Both were invited to sing the same night at a Court concert before the Queen. Jenny Lind, being the younger, sang first, and was so disturbed by the fierce, scornful look of Grisi that she was at the point of failure, when suddenly an inspiration came to her. The accompanist was striking his final chords. She asked him to rise, and took the vacant seat. Her fingers wandered over the keys in a loving prelude, and then she sang a little prayer which she had loved as a child. She hadn't sung it for years. As she sang she was no longer in the presence of royalty, but singing to loving friends in her fatherland.

Softly at first the plaintive notes floated on the air, swelling louder and richer every moment. The singer seemed to throw her whole soul into that weird, thrilling, plaintive "prayer." Gradually the song died away and ended in a sob. There was silence—the silence of admiring wonder. The audience sat spell-bound. Jenny Lind lifted her sweet eyes to look into the scornful face that had so disconcerted her. There was no fierce expression now; instead a teardrop glistened on the long, black lashes, and after a moment, with the impulsiveness of a child of the tropics, Grisi crossed to Jenny Lind's side, placed her arm about her and kissed her, utterly regardless of the audience—"Zion's Watchman."

A Christian minister was on one occasion debating with the Duke of Wellington with regards to the claims of foreign missions.

The old warrior listened calmly without making any comment for a long while. At last he said, "I think, sir, you have forgotten your marching orders."

"What are they?" asked the clergyman.

"Did not your Master bid you go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature?"

"Yes," said the minister, "He did."

THE LAST OPPORTUNITY.

The late Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, the famous skeptic, told many stories of experiences which grew out of the common knowledge of his skepticism. One of these related to a visit which he once made to Phillips Brooks, before Doctor Brooks became a bishop.

Calling on Doctor Brooks, he was refused admission, because, as the servant said, it was "sermon day," and some of Doctor Brooks' own home people had already been denied admission. But Doctor Brooks learned that Ingersoll was at the door, and sent out word that he should come in.

After the interview and as Colonel Ingersoll was about to leave, he said:

"Doctor Brooks, your man told me that you had denied yourself to some of your home people this morning. Now how is it that you have admitted me, a stranger?"

"Oh, that's quite easy," said Doctor Brooks, laughing. "They are my church-members, and I shall see them again, here or in heaven, but isn't it right for me to consider your belief, and that I shall probably never meet you again!"

The annual sales of Swift and Company for the year 1898 aggregated over one hundred and fifty millions of dollars. Figuring 313 working days to the year, 8 hours to the day, shows that the sales exceeded one thousand dollars per minute for every 1898 working day. Why purchase unknown goods when the name of Swift guarantees purity and reliability in all food products?

"THE COMPANION'S" NEW CALENDAR.

"The Youth's Companion" Calendar for 1900 is unique in form and beautiful in design. The oval centerpiece, in high colors and enclosed in a border of flowers, represents "A Dream of Summer," and is supported on either side by an admirably-executed figure piece in delicate tints. The whole is delightful in sentiment and in general effect. Larger than any of "The Companion's" previous Calendars, it is equally acceptable as a work of art. As an ornament to the home it will take a pre-eminent place.

The Calendar is published exclusively by "The Companion." It cannot be obtained elsewhere. It will be given to all new subscribers for 1900, who will also receive, in addition to the fifty-two issues of the new volume, all the issues for the remaining weeks of 1899, free from the time of subscription. Illustrated Announcement Number, containing a full prospectus of the volume for 1900, will be sent free to any address.

CALIFORNIA TRIPS.

Leaving Washington every Tuesday and Friday, at 11.15 a.m., the Southern Railway operates personally conducted tourist excursions to San Francisco, Cal., without change of cars, conductors or porters. The route is through Atlanta, Montgomery, New Orleans, Houston, San Antonio, New Mexico, Arizona and Southern California. The cars are the very latest pattern of Pullman tourist sleepers, rosewood finish, have high back seats, upholstered in rattan, are sixteen section, supplied with linen, etc., same as standard sleepers, lighted by Pintsch gas, have wide vestibules, double sash roller curtains, lavatory and smoking room for gentlemen, and two retiring rooms for ladies.

Three and one-half days to Mexico and Arizona, four days to Los Angeles and Southern California, and five days to San Francisco. Such service for Trans-Continental travel has never before been offered.

The tourist car fare is less than via any other route, effecting a saving of $20.00 to $30.00 for the trip.

All information, maps and rates furnished on application to Charles L. Hopkins, District Passenger Agent Southern Railway Co., 828 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

SUBSCRIBERS' WANTS.

This department of "Subscribers' Wants" will be found of value by anyone wishing to reach the Friends with a small advertisement. It has already done excellent service for those who have used it. The varied character of the notices shows that its value is confined to no particular class of "want" advertising, but that it may be used with advantage by all who have anything to advertise. Five lines, one time, cost only 25 cents; additional lines 5 cents each. Extra insertions at the same rate.

A SERENE PROVIDENCE.

The ancients believed in a serene and beautiful Genius which ruled in the affairs of nations, which, with a slow but stern justice, carried forward the fortunes of certain chosen houses, weeding out single offenders or offending families, and securing at last the firm prosperity of the favorites of heaven. It was too narrow a view. There is a serene Providence which rules the fate of nations, which makes little account of time, little of one generation or race, makes no account of disasters, conquers alike by what is called defeat or by what is called victory, thrusts aside enemy and obstruction, crushes everything immoral as inhuman, and obtains the ultimate triumph of the best race by the sacrifice of everything which resists the moral law of the world. It makes its own instruments, creates the man for the time, trains him in poverty, inspires his genius, and arms him for his task. It has given every race its own talent, and ordains that only that race which combines perfectly with the virtues of all shall endure.

A NEW BOOK FOR FRIENDS

Practical Christianity

By RUFUS M. JONES

This is a collection of short, practical articles on important religious subjects. Most of them have appeared during the last few years as editorials in the "THE AMERICAN FRIEND." They have been carefully selected. Only those which seemed of permanent value are here collected. The book also contains a chapter on the "Message of Quakerism." Sent postpaid for $1.00.

THE SOUL'S REST.

I am glad that neither golden sky
Nor violet lights that linger on the hill,
Nor ocean's wistful blue shall satisfy,
But they shall fill
With wild unrest and endless longing still,
The soul whose hope beyond them all must lie.

And I rejoice that love shall never seem
So perfect as it ever was to be,
But endlessly that inner haunting dream
Each heart shall see
Hinted in every dawn's fresh purity,
Hopelessly shadowed in each sunset's gleam.

And though warm mouths will kiss and hands will cling,
And thought by silent thought be understood,
I do rejoice that the next hour will bring
That far-off mood
That drives one like a lonely child to God,
Who only sees and measures everything.

—"The Watchman."

HERESY OF THE HEART.

It has been customary to use the word "heresy" for wrong belief—i.e., belief which is in conflict or contrast with the generally accepted teaching of the church, though the word originally means a "choice" or "selection." We say now, of any teaching which runs counter to the ordinary thought of the Christian Church, that it is heresy, and in a loose way the word is used to characterize any teaching which seems new or dangerous. Everybody who studies history—the history of Christian doctrine—knows that the "orthodox faith" has never been a fixed and stable thing, an unchangeable foot-rule to measure individual belief by; it has instead been a constant growth and change, and frequently the heresy of one age has been the orthodoxy of another, though this is not the case with the great fundamental facts of the Christian religion. These central truths have stood like the pole-star amid the changes.

But what we shall call "the heresy of the heart" is always and everywhere a heresy, whether it appears in the Greek, the Romanist, the Presbyterian or the Quaker, and no amount of orthodoxy of belief can make up for it. We mean by the term a spiritual deadness, a fatness of heart, a failure to recognize the light when it comes, a disobedience to the heavenly vision, a lack of appreciation of love when it is manifested. Bad as wrong belief may be, this condition is worse. It is of this that Christ speaks when He says, blasphemy against the Son shall be forgiven, but blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven. A man may make a mistake in his conception of the nature of Christ as the Son of God; he may even deny Him as Peter did, or refuse to believe as Thomas did until more evidence is given, and still be forgiven. But the man who persistently sins against the light, who hardens his heart against love, who says no, no, to the call of the Spirit, who will not recognize God's love when he is surrounded by it, and who scales his own eyes against heavenly visions, how shall he be forgiven? In fact, no man can be forgiven until he can appreciate what love and forgiveness mean.

There is no course in this world so dangerous as that of closing the eyes to light and the heart to love. A man may easily be brought out of his heresy of belief by better teaching, by wise counsel, by further study. An honest, sincere man always changes his mind when he gets new light and when clearer ideas come to him. But it is quite a harder matter to rescue and save a man who has steadily refused to obey the light he has had or to appreciate the love he has received. You cannot help the blind fishes of Mammoth Cave by letting more light into their cavern since, by disuse, they have now lost their eyes.

We do not say that a man may ultimately lose his spiritual sense and become heart blind by failure to use light and to believe in love, but we do say that there is no other danger so great, and there is no other heresy to compare with this. It is Judas and not Peter, or even the thief on the cross, whose case seems hopeless, since Judas lived in the very blaze of light and saw the mighty love of the Divine Son day after day, and yet in the presence of it all shrunk his heart until he preferred thirty pieces of silver to Christ's great love. This is the supreme heresy, and many who think they cannot believe, and who seem to be losing their faith, will find, if they examine closely, that their main difficulty is that they are living on a low plane, are not obeying the light they have, and are unresponsive to the love which reaches them. Faith "abideth" only when Love abideth.

THANKSGIVING DAY.

THE Jews had their "Feast of Tabernacles," which perhaps goes back to the days of the patriarchs, and which was a great harvest festival for joy and thanksgiving. It has been an ancient custom in New England, running back to the foundation of the colony, to have in the autumn a day of thanksgiving; and since the civil war the custom has become a national one.

It is by proclamation a national holiday, and our President, together with the governors of our forty-five States, urge us not only to rest from toil, but to give thanks for the blessings of the year, and to remember the poor and needy. It is not easy to make a man thankful by proclamation, and it is a well-known fact that this particular day in the year is not exclusively devoted to praise and thanksgiving to our good Father in heaven. Custom has made it a day for feasting and family reunions, a day for sports and jollity. It may fairly be said, however, that it is a happy day, and all who are not "heavy-laden" under toil or poverty or sorrow keep the festival with joy.

This is certainly good as far as it goes, for happiness and joy and the sunny spirit are the next door to praise, but it is to be feared that most of us are not conscious enough of our Father's goodness to us, and that too little incense of thanksgiving rises from our hearts either on this day or on any other days.

We get so accustomed to the prodigality of God's favors, His unstinted goodness and mercy, that we take it all as a matter of course. It is only when something extraordinary comes into our lives, something which we call "almost providential," that we stop to think of God in connection with it. The circling life, the ceaseless love, the tender care, like the stars and sunshine, are hardly noted, they are so common. When a cloud shuts them out we miss them, but when we have them we take them as "natural."

It would be well if we could use our Thanksgiving day, or at least some minutes of it, in genuine recognition of God and our relation to Him, if we could get a real sense of the source—not only of what we childishly call "providential things," but of all the common blessings of our lives, which fall like heavenly dew daily upon us all.

We need, too, to see more clearly than some of us now do that God's blessings are not confined to "basket and store," that our real riches are not in the things which we "get" and "possess," and that the supreme success consists in growing "rich in God," to use one of Christ's words.

Now, God's method of making us rich in Him, and of giving us the fruit of character and a holy life, is not always as plainly evident to us as are His rain and His sun which increases our crops. We ask for truer, richer lives, but when He sends the trial, the struggle, the baptism through which the richer life is possible, we think He has deserted us and failed to bless us. We need to school ourselves to see the uses and blessings of what we call "dispensations," to see through them to the Father who is training us, no less in the darkness than in the light, no less in the shadow than in the sun, no less in the rough than in the smooth. It is well to have a habit of finding God in all things, to see that He is "blessing," even though the fig-tree may not blossom, and to wear "the garment of praise."

GENERAL CHURCH NOTES.

While engaged in evangelistic work, in Kansas City, last week, Dwight L. Moody was taken seriously ill with heart trouble, and was forced to cut his engagement short. He is now at his home in East Northfield, Mass. His condition is reported to have greatly improved.

A performance of the famous "Passion Play" will be given at Ober-Ammergau, in Germany, in the summer of 1900, beginning May 23d. The artless simplicity of the Bavarian peasants, which has heretofore marked the performances of the play, is said to have given way to a spirit of commercial greed. Great preparations are being made to entertain guests, and a great number of foreigners are expected.

Dr. Henry Van Dyke has presented his formal resignation as pastor of the Brick Presbyterian church in New York city. He will occupy a chair of literature in Princeton University.

John Watson ("Ian Maclaren"), in a recent magazine article, finds the church of to-day in America too secular and given to the worship of material things. He condemns the prevalent practice of mixing religion with entertainment, stigmatizing it as an attempt to make the church a sort of social club.

A late citizen of Westfield, Mass., bequeathed his entire estate of $12,000 to Dwight L. Moody, "for the promotion of Christian principles, for the up-building of the cause of Christ, trusting in his care, fidelity and good judgment to place the same where it will do the most good."

The recent prohibition by the Japanese government of religious teaching in the schools troubles the missionary boards of several Protestant denominations which started and have so long carried on the modern education of Japan. Representatives of the Congregational, Episcopal, Methodist, Reformed, Baptist and Presbyterian bodies, at a conference in New York city, have agreed to petition the government of Japan to allow the use of religious ceremonies in schools founded on private funds. In case this is refused, the missionary boards of Europe and America must abandon their teaching in that country.

AMONG THE DOUKHOBORS.

Dr. William Saunders, an intimate friend of James T. Shinn, of Philadelphia, is in charge of the Central Experimental Farm, at Ottawa, Canada, as head of the Agricultural Department of the Dominion.

"I went to this district partly to see the country, and partly to see how far I could make our own agricultural work beneficial to these people, and I can now see many ways in which I can help them, and shall be glad to do all that is in my power to further their interests, and I know that the Canadian people will be willing to sanction any reasonable expenditure sufficient to keep these worthy people from suffering. They do not, however, ask for help, and in the pleasure they feel in being free from persecution, they seem happy and contented with the most frugal diet.

"I feel sure that in a very few years they will become a prosperous community, and henceforth live happily in the enjoyment of freedom.

"On Sunday I made the necessary arrangements for a start northward, and on Monday morning we took provisions for ourselves and the horses for three days, a large fur robe and a pair of heavy blankets, so that we might be able to sleep out if necessary. I also got an order for an interpreter who lives fifteen miles out on the trail, and is employed by the Government, to go with us to the first two villages, and after that we were to be our own interpreters and get along as best we might without words with pantomime. The first village we (that is, my driver Jack and myself, with the interpreter) stopped at was about thirty miles

DOUKHOBORS AT HOME IN ASSINIBOIA, CANADA.

This colony is situated on the White Sand River, 300 miles N. W. from Winnipeg.

He has recently visited the Doukhobors, in new settlements, and as his testimony is impartial and reliable, we quote at some length from a letter to James T. Shinn, dated Tenth month 8th, 1899*:

"I wanted you also to know how greatly these long-suffering people appreciate the kindness shown them by not only the Canadian Government and people, but also by the generous aid sent by the good Friends in Philadelphia and in England.

* Some of the facts contained in this article have already been given in a former article by Dr. Saunders, but the graphic description of the situation presented in these personal letters will be of interest to everybody.—ED.

from Yorkton, and the second about forty. As it was now getting dusk when we reached the second village, I thought at first we would spend the night with the Doukhobors; but after seeing the conditions of this village, I reconsidered the matter.

"This camp has as yet but few houses, and each house is a single room used for all purposes—eating, cooking and sleeping. In the first house visited we found about forty people in all, mostly women and children. In the next house they were less numerous, about twenty-five in all. In the third there were five horses at one end, and about a dozen, more or less, of children at the other. The larger building would be,

I think, about 25x35 feet, the smaller ones about 20x30 feet.

"The furniture in all the Doukhobor houses is home-made, and consists of a few stools and one or two benches. The beds are made with a continuous row of poplar poles arranged along both sides of the room, about two feet from the floor. On these some hay is laid, and on the hay a thick piece of coarse felt, and on this felt such bed clothes as are available. In the buildings densely populated a second tier of beds is built. The people lie with their heads to the wall and their feet out. I thought the prospects very poor of either a quiet or comfortable night at either of these places, so I talked the matter over with Jack, the driver, and we finally concluded to push on to Fort Pelley, which was eleven miles distant, leaving our interpreter with the Doukhobors. It was cloudy and very dark, so that we were often unable to see the horses' heads; but we kept the trail without any mishap, and about 11 p.m. we approached the Assiniboine Doukhobor boy who could speak some English, Fred Ivans by name. His father, Ivan Ivans, left Russia some months before the general exodus took place, and resided at Perley, near London, where he learned some English and in part adopted their ways of living. I found Fred to be a very bright boy about, I should think, fourteen or fifteen years of age. He was two months in Winnipeg last winter and learnt what English he knows while there. His sister, some two or three years younger, also spoke some English. The father and mother are very nice people, and very hospitable as far as it is possible for them to show hospitality. Before I had quite exhausted Fred Ivans's stock of English, a Russian young lady appeared on the scene—Miss Welaetchkina, who is a physician, a graduate of the University at Berne, in Switzerland. She spoke English fairly well, and from her I learned much of the condition of the people. They are all vegetarians, and as far as I could learn none of them will eat meat.

River. I never liked fording a river in the dark, but Jack had been over this trail a number of times, and so we started, and in a few minutes we were over, and in ten or fifteen minutes more we were at the Fort. The factor, Mr. McBeth, had gone to bed, but we roused him up and got him to take us in. We had driven sixty miles that day, much of it over a rough trail, and being tired I was soon asleep. At 8.30 the next morning we were ready for a fresh start. About 11 a.m. we passed through one or two other Doukhobor camps, but did not find any one with whom we could communicate, so we pushed further on and forded the Swan River, over the roughest ford I ever saw, the bottom being made up of a succession of big boulders, which threatened every moment to upset our rig and tumble us into the very rapid stream. We got safely over, after which a drive of two or three miles brought us to another village, where we knew there lived a

"Their fare at present is very meagre—dry bread made from the cheapest grade of flour; soup made with flour and water, with cabbage, beets and onions, was, as far as I could find out, the fare of most of the people; but in some instances they had potatoes. I did not find butter, cheese or eggs in any of the settlements; but I did not hear a word of complaint. I think Ivan Ivans's settlement is perhaps about as well off as most of the villages, and there I got fuller particulars from the nice little lady, the Russian doctor, than I could get elsewhere. In that community there were ninety souls; seventeen of the men were away working on the railways and among farmers, earning from $1.25 to $1.50 per day. These men have remitted to their several villages from $20 to $25 a month each, and from the money thus earned a stock of flour is being laid in for winter. They also buy such supplies as they need in building their houses, such as windows, hinges for doors and more or less lumber. In Ivan Ivans's village there are four horses and a colt and one cow; I think horses enough to furnish one for each family there. I inquired from Mrs. Ivan Ivans as to the share of their family of the milk of this cow, and was told it was a small cow, not giving much milk, and for their family of seven—five children and themselves—they had a teacupful night and morning. Of fowls, they had one hen and one cock, so I did not inquire further as to the supply of fresh eggs. They seemed very careful of such animals as they have, but they must have more before long.

"They have got a good deal of land broken—about one hundred acres at Ivan Ivans's village. As the men were most of them absent, and the horses were engaged in bringing in supplies most of the time, and about one journey to Yorkton, ninety miles and return ninety miles, is all they can do in a week, the women undertook to do most of the plowing. It took—to use the language in which it was given me—seven pairs of women to each plough. I inquired how much of the one hundred acres I saw had been ploughed by the women, and was told that they had done the larger part of it. The land is good, but it will not be in very without delay. It seems much more difficult to help a community of vegetarians in this country than a community of meat eaters; but I think they would prefer to starve than eat meat. They are just the sort of stuff of which martyrs are made.

"It would take too long to tell the story of our adventures after leaving Ivan Ivans, but early Wednesday afternoon we reached a little frontier town in the Dauphin district, tired and hungry, as we had left everything we could leave behind us with the Doukhobors. The latter part of the journey was very rough—over new trails, through a wooded country where the trees were not cut very close to the ground, the stumps being left a foot or more high, and so thick that it was not possible in driving to avoid more than a part of them. Although pitched about in every direction, I escaped without injury, except to one of my fingers, which, in driving over an extra high stump, got jammed between the wheel and the vehicle. Fortunately, I had a handkerchief convenient, which I tore up and bound the protruding flesh and staunched the blood. It was very painful for about an hour, but afterwards the pain subsided and it has given me very little trouble since.

DOUKHOBOR WOMEN PLOWING IN CANADA.

The Doukhobors being very poor and unable to buy horses or oxen for all their plows, and many men being obliged to leave home to earn money, the women draw the plows as the easiest and quickest way to break up the soil.

good shape for seeding next spring; still I have no doubt they will get a fair crop from it.

"The houses they are building are warm and comfortable, and they have plenty of wood for fuel on their lands. They will also, I think, get in a fair supply of potatoes. The women are going out to work to help settlers wherever there are settlers within twenty miles of their villages; and while it will take a good deal of food to supply five thousand people, which is about the number of Doukhobors in that part of the country, they seemed very contented and I did not hear a word of complaint, and they all seemed busy doing something.

"I left that settlement on Tuesday afternoon and went north and east, which led us near some of the other villages; but having no interpreter, I did not think I could gain much further information; besides, Miss Welaetchkina had promised to write me and give me particulars regarding all the other villages. I learnt from her that she was much in need of medical supplies, and, on reaching Winnipeg yesterday, I reported this need to the proper authorities and made arrangements to have the necessary supplies sent on

I had something over fifty miles of driving in the Dauphin country, then took train at the town of Dauphin, on Friday morning, and reached Winnipeg on Friday night. On Saturday morning I reported to the Government officers the condition in which I found these people, and Mr. McCreary, the chief officer, promised to have the medical supplies sent on at once. He also told me that ten or twelve more cows were on their way to the settlements, and he had that morning received a telegram from some of the Friends in Philadelphia to buy a carload of potatoes and a car of onions and forward them to the settlements. I did not know until I visited the district that the Friends in Philadelphia and in England had done so much to help these worthy and persecuted people. But there I learnt of the kind visits of Joseph S. Elkinton, William Evans and Mrs. Varney, and of the very substantial help which had been received, for all of which these poor people feel truly grateful. The Canadian Government has, I learn, much exceeded the sum which was placed in the estimates and which was then thought to be sufficient, but considerably more must be done before these people are quite independent."

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

THE ORIGIN AND GROWTH OF EDUCATION
AMONG FRIENDS IN WESTERN INDIANA.

BY HARLOW LINDLEY.

FRIENDS' MONTHLY MEETING SCHOOLS.

Parke County.

BLOOMFIELD.—In the fall of 1831 the first Friends' school in Parke County was begun in a new log house at Bloomfield (now Bloomingdale), on the ground which is now occupied by the Friends' meeting. The first teacher here was Enoch Morrison, who taught the school for twelve months. Among those who followed him were Jeremiah H. Siler, James Siler, Alfred Hadley, William Rees, Hannah Draper, Matilda Lindley, Ann H. Kersey and Eleazar Kersey. Subscriptions were kept up by the supporters of the school to pay the teachers who were selected by the Educational Committee of the church and approved by the monthly meeting. For several years after the school started there was only one session each year, and that lasted for twelve months. There was only one room, and nothing beyond the common branches was taught. This school passed entirely out of the control of the church about 1880.

The settlement of Friends gradually spread into Reserve and Liberty townships, centering about Rocky Run (Coloma) in the former, and Rush Creek (Sylvania) in the latter township.

ROCKY RUN.—A Friends' school was organized at Rocky Run in 1832. At Blomfield Monthly Meeting, held Third month 5th, 1834, a proposition was made and united with that a school like the one already established at Bloomfield be established at Rocky Run, and a committee was appointed to open free subscriptions and superintend the building of said school. One month later the committee reported the building completed for a summer school, the school thus established becoming a monthly meeting school. This school remained under the entire control of the Friends up to about 1864. While the school has been a township public school since that time, yet the trustee has always allowed the Friends to have a voice in the selection of teachers; and the meeting has always maintained a committee which has visited the school regularly. This school has, no doubt, had a great influence over the neighborhood for good, and has remained, to a certain extent, after the Friends' original model, longer than any other common school within the scope of our territory. Among some of its teachers while a Friends' school were John Overman, James Siler, Silas Stout, William Reese, Jesse Lawrence, Jackson Allen, Mahala Morris, William E. Morris, Ann Kersey, S. B. Woodard, William N. Trueblood, Alida (Hadley) Cox, Emma J. Woodard, Eunice (Newlin) Mendenhall, Martha (Newlin) Lindley and Thomas Armstrong.

RUSH CREEK.—In the fall of 1835 the Educational Committee proposed that a suitable school house be erected at Rush Creek. A committee was appointed to take charge of the work, and in Eleventh month, 1837, they reported that Rush Creek school house had been completed, at a cost of $8,650. Among the first teachers were Synthia Ann Hollingsworth, David Newlin and Green Mote. Some of the subsequent ones who taught two or more terms were Hiram Lindley, Ann H. Kersey, Newton Hadley, William Pickett, Jesse Lawrence, Eunice (Newlin) Mendenhall, Dinah (Towell) Henderson, Isaac Lindley, William A. Moore, Levi Woody, Mahlon Lindley and Martha (Newlin) Lindley, the latter teaching nine terms. The teachers were all selected by a committee of the church and the moral interests of the school were carefully guarded. In the latter years of the school, in addition to the common branches, Algebra, Natural Philosophy, Chemistry, Astronomy, Geology, Botany, Meteorology, Physical Geography, Mental Philosophy and Latin were taught. At this time the school was in charge of two teachers. This school was one of the best in the county. It passed out of the hands of the church about 1875, and its standard at once declined until it became only an ordinary public school. The first house was built of logs. Later a frame structure was built, to which was added a large addition to accommodate two teachers. This building is now used as the parsonage of the Rush Creek Friends' Meeting.

POPLAR GROVE.—The Friends maintained another monthly meeting school in Parke County, located at Poplar Grove (near Marshall). This was a very small school, and very little history can be given with regard to it.

Vermilion County.

HOPEWELL.—In Vermilion County there was one monthly meeting school known as Hopewell. Among the earliest teachers at this place were Cynthia Ann and Jane Hollingsworth; also William Holiday. This school continued as a monthly meeting school until about 1842. Again, about 1853 or 1854, the school was re-established near the meeting house, and was under the control of the committee part of the time. The school continued until about 1856, when the work passed out of the hands of the church.

Montgomery County.

Three monthly meeting schools, under the control of Friends, have existed in Montgomery County. Sugar River school was first taught, about 1836, by Joseph Roberts, and he was followed by William Rees.

In 1838, the first school at Center (Darlington) was taught by John Cox. Among the other early teachers were Harvey Thomas, Peter Elliott, James G. Small, Mary Ann Trueblood and Hezekiah Clark. Harvey Thomas taught here the year before he opened the work at Bloomingdale Academy. This school passed out from under the care of Friends in 1872.

The Friends' school, at Gravelly Run, was established about 1840. It was taught by Mahlon Butler, and later by Louise Cox, Nathan T. Pickett, Sarah Jane Moffit and others.

These schools were all within the limits of Sugar River Monthly Meeting.

Boone County.

Three Friends' schools have existed in Boone County. A Friends' school was established at Sugar Plain (near Thorntown) in the early thirties. Sugar Plain Monthly Meeting was opened Twelfth month 5th, 1840, and from this time forth the school was under its immediate care. Among the teachers in the thirties were Ruth and Elizabeth Moffit, Samuel Wells and Rachel Milner. About 1845, Harvey Thomas was connected with the school for a year, and from that time on, as long as the school remained under the control of Friends to any extent, studies in advance of the common school branches were taught, and one or two assistant teachers were employed. As early as the sixties teachers had to pass examinations, and were paid with public money; yet the church continued to have general oversight of the school, the employment of teachers, etc. About 1881 a regular high school course of study was established; but on account of the school's close proximity to Thorntown the church gave up what control it did have, about 1893 or 1894, and high school work was abandoned. Among the teachers, after Harvey Thomas, were Emily Clark, Aseneth Clark, Mary R. Miller, Peter Elliott, John T. Lindley, Ira Mendenhall and Calvin Cook, and later Absalom Rosenberger and Absalom Knight. In the early sixties, after a Friends' meeting was first established in Thorntown, a Friends' school was established here for a short time. Among the teachers of this school were Mary Hadley Hill, Joseph John Mills and Lizzie Roberts Townsend.

Another Friends' school was established within the limits of Sugar Plain Monthly Meeting, at Walnut Grove Meeting. Among the teachers of this school were Bettie Maxwell, Sarah J. Moffit, Peter Elliott and Enos Kendall.

SCHOOLS FOR HIGHER EDUCATION.

While some of these schools, previously mentioned, extended their work beyond the common branches, yet in our territory there were two schools whose primary object was to give the advantages of advanced subjects in the line of higher education.

These schools were "Farmers' Institute" and "Friends' Bloomingdale Academy."

Farmers' Institute.—Farmers' Institute was organized in 1852 at Farmers' Institute, Tippecanoe County, and was a school of academic grade. It was organized during the palmy days of Friends' schools, and continued in a very flourishing condition, with the exception of one interval, until 1872. Students from all of the neighboring States attended this school, and for many years the attendance ranged from seventy-five to one hundred. The school was very well supplied with apparatus, possessed a large library, and maintained a very lively literary society. Among its superintendents were Jeremiah A. Grinnell and Allen Jay; also Prof. Moses C. Stevens, Cyrus Mendenhall, Thomas Clark, Cyrus Lindley, Henry Hoxie and J. Addison Clark served the institution as principals at various times.

About 1872 the school went down; but after two years an effort was made to re-establish it. This movement failed, and the school, as a Friends' school, was abandoned in 1876.

There were no other Friends' schools in Tippecanoe County.

Friends' Bloomingdale Academy.—Among the Friends' institutions of higher educations in Western Indiana, none have stood out as prominently as Friends' Bloomingdale Academy. The influence of this school has not only been of a local nature, but has been widespread, extending into many States, and not confined to Friends alone. It thus seems appropriate to give a full account of its origin and growth.

Western Quarterly Meeting of Friends was opened at Bloomfield, Second month 13th, 1836, including the Friends occupying the western part of the State of Indiana and the eastern part of Illinois, including the communities now constituting Bloomingdale, Thorntown and Vermilion Quarterly Meetings. With the establishment of the new quarterly meeting an Educational Committee was appointed to have general oversight of the educational work within the limits of the quarterly meeting. The committee held regular quarterly meetings devoted to this work alone, yet the immediate direction of the monthly meeting schools was left to these committees, which made regular reports to the superior committee.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

HAWORTH REUNION.

BY CHARLES O. NEWLIN.

Following the close of Western Yearly Meeting, on Ninth month 21st and 22d, there was a very pleasant two-days' reunion of the Haworth family of America on the yearly meeting grounds at Plainfield, Ind., with representatives from five States and the Indian Territory.

The reunion was largely the result of the thought of William P. Haworth, of Ottawa, Indian Territory, who, several years since, found reminiscences of the family, written and verbal, tracing the history of different branches of the family back to one common emigrant (George Haworth), who came over with William Penn on his second voyage to America, in 1699.

William P. Haworth conceived the idea of a "bi-centennial" of this emigration in a national reunion of the whole family. By private correspondence and through THE AMERICAN FRIEND a call was made, to which about two hundred members of the family responded. William P. Haworth gave a very interesting account of the way he became interested in the subject, and exhibited a chart he had in preparation already containing about seven hundred names, mostly of the earlier generations of the family. There was also a genealogical tree exhibited, as prepared by the Iowa branch of the family, and a genealogical record of the North Carolina branch prepared by Mary Petty, of Greensboro, N. C. Older records of the Ohio and Tennessee branches were read, and incidents and reminiscences were given verbally. The family had made a good showing in trades and professions, and a goodly number were ministers of the gospel, nine of whom were present in the meeting, and the religious feeling of those present was indicated by the readiness with which the meetings became so largely interspersed with devotion.

A permanent organization was effected, with Wm. P. Haworth, of Ottawa, Indian Territory, as president; Mary Petty, of Greensboro, N. C., as secretary; Chas. F. Haworth, of Ridge Farm, Ill., as treasurer, and vice-presidents for their respective States as follows: For North Carolina, T. B. F. Haworth, High Point; for Tennessee, Mahlon Haworth, Maryville; for Ohio, Hattie E. Hadley, Ogden; for Indiana, John D. Haworth, West Newton; for Illinois, Charles F. Haworth, Ridge Farm; for Iowa, J. D. Haworth, Milo; for Oregon, J. L. Haworth, Spring Brook; for Kansas, Wm. Q. Elliott, Sterling; for Missouri, A. Lindley Haworth, Albia.

This being a day of specialists, it seemed in place to concentrate special interest in those who are connected to us by family ties and blood relationship, so State vice-presidents were encouraged to organize their States and hold annual reunions, and the National Executive Committee were authorized to organize States where no vice-presidents were named. It was concluded to hold another national reunion in three years from this at such time and place as the Executive Committee may fix.

So far as it was expressed, it was the unanimous opinion of those present that the two days had been profitably and pleasantly spent.

Plainfield, Ind.

WHAT CANNOT BE ACCOUNTED FOR.

Before we set ourselves to inquire into the reason for an assumed state of facts, it would be well for us to ascertain whether or not the thing assumed is really so. A great deal of valuable time is lost because of not doing this. Long arguments are framed in favor of this cause or that, as accounting for what does not exist. It was two or three thousand years ago that a wise man gave a caution in this line, when he said, "Say not thou, What is the cause that the former days were better than these? for thou dost not inquire wisely concerning this." There is no use trying to find out the reason for what has no existence. The man who is seeking to learn why the politics or morals of to-day are worse than those of former days is on the wrong track to start with. He is like a man who attempts to settle the question why the ox-teams of our fathers were a more rapid mode of conveyance than a modern express train. An American humorist has said, "It's better not to know so much than to know so many things that ain't so." Only the truth is worth accounting for.—"Sunday School Times."

FOURTH QUARTER.

Lesson X.

Twelfth month 3, 1899.

KEEPING THE SABBATH.

Nehemiah 13: 15-22.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. Ex. 20: 8.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Eleventh mo. 27.—Keeping the Sabbath. Neh. 13: 15-22.
Third-day, Eleventh mo. 28.—The Sabbath appointed. Gen. 1: 26-2: 3.
Fourth-day, Eleventh mo. 29.—Sabbath to be hallowed. Jer. 17: 19-27.
Fifth-day, Eleventh mo. 30.—Sabbath breaking denounced. Ezek. 20: 10-20.
Sixth-day, Twelfth mo. 1.—Blessings in keeping. Isa. 56: 1-7.
Seventh-day, Twelfth mo. 2.—Sabbath joy. Isa. 58: 8-14.
First-day, Twelfth mo. 3.—Christ's teaching. Luke 6: 1-10.

Lesson 8 left the people rejoicing over the knowledge of the Law, which was unfolded to them, for the first time, through Ezra. With hearts full they set about to carry out the injunctions they had received. On the 24th day of the month following the reading of the Law, the Jews were assembled for a day of national humiliation, and of covenant making (9: 1, 2). After the dealings of the Lord with Israel were rehearsed, and the sins of Israel related and confessed, a "sure covenant" was written and sealed on behalf of the people, and united with by all who were old enough to understand that the Law should be carried out. (10:29).

Various methods of government and ritual and living were arranged. Everything promised well. All this was done in the absence of Nehemiah, who appears to have left Jerusalem and returned to Susa. How long he was at Jerusalem, we do not know. From Chapter 5:14 we learn that he was governor twelve years, but that he was at Jerusalem all the time is not stated.

Apparently some information came to him that affairs were not going on satisfactorily at Jerusalem. With some difficulty he obtained leave to visit the city (13:6). On reaching his destination, he found four evils which troubled him greatly: (1) Tobiah, the Ammonite (2:10,6:1-2) had been allowed to come into the city and a room had been assigned him within the Temple itself; (2) The payments which had been promised to the Levites had not been kept up (10:36-38); (3) Sabbath breaking; (4) intermarriage with the people of the land. Among the chief sinners in this matter were the priests. It is with the third of these that the lesson is concerned, but the whole of the chapter should be read.

15. "Winepresses." The press is where the grapes are trodden, the wine vat (fat, in Authorized Version) is where the juice is collected. "On the Sabbath." The observance of the Sabbath day was always one of the great distinctions between the Jew and the Gentile. The temptation to lessen the restrictions of the Law regarding it was great, especially in the case of those Jews who traded with the Gentiles. This explains the strictness of such passages as Isa. 56:2, 58:13; Jer. 17:21-22; Ezek. 20:16; 22:26. In this verse Nehemiah seems to refer to the bringing in goods on the Sabbath day.

16. "Therein." In Jerusalem. "Sold on the Sabbath." This is the statement of the fact. The wrong was in the Jews buying, as is shown in the next verse. Nehemiah does not criticize the Tyrians for selling them salted fish on the Sabbath. "In Jerusalem." It would have been bad enough in the country, but in the holy city it was hardly to be believed.

17. "What evil thing is this that ye do?" etc. It was a sin to the Jews, because it was a direct violation of a divine command. Nehemiah saw in it something in addition to this; it was a breaking down of one of the most important barriers between the Jew and the Gentile. To yield on this point would be the beginning of a return to the former apostasy. It must be noted that what was right for the Jew in Nehemiah's day, need necessarily not be required now. By degrees the Jew had come to regard the Sabbath in such a light of formalism that in our Lord's time the day was one of burdens instead of rest, and its mere formal observance called forth some of his severest rebukes. He laid down the true law of Sabbath observance—a law of universal application: "The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath." (Mark 2:27.) The tendency of our age is to emphasize the latter clause of Christ's saying. Let us not forget the true meaning of the first clause.

"The world is too much with us; late and soon, Getting and spending, we lay waste our powers;"

A day of rest and spiritual refreshment is more and more needed in this restless, nervous, atmosphere in which so many of us live.

It should never be forgotten that our day of rest is the first day of the week—the Lord's day. It is not the Jewish Sabbath with its narrow restrictions. The obligation antedates the law and is confirmed and explained by Christ in the spirit of true liberty, which forbids license. The action of the Christian church, in changing her day of rest from the seventh to the first day of the week, was one of the most important steps taken in her history; it forever placed the matter on the solid foundation of a universal need which can be universally met.

18. "Did not your fathers" etc. He refers to the history of their nation. Compare Jer. 17: 22, 23, 27.

19. Nehemiah now puts into action some regulations, which he hopes will remedy the evil, or at last remove some of the temptation.

20. The dealers appear to have carried on trade outside the gates of the city.

21. Nehemiah, finding his first measures insufficient, threatens the dealers, and as he was the governor, the delinquents knew he could use force, and so they gave up.

22. "I commanded the Levites." It would seem a proper office for the Levites to fill. They should be specially interested in the right observance of the day. "Cleanse." The duty was a sacred one, and so it was fitting that they should purify themselves. "Remember me." Nehemiah felt that he was doing a great work, and doubtless he had been severely criticized. It was an unpopular measure. He needed the divine favor and blessing and encouragement.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR TWELFTH MONTH THIRD, 1899.

"UNTIL HE COME." THE LORD'S SUPPER.

1 Cor. 11: 23-28.

Second-day, Eleventh mo. 27.—Remembrance. Luke 22: 14-20.

Third-day, Eleventh mo. 28.—Thanksgiving. Mark 14: 22-25.

Fourth-day, Eleventh mo. 29.—Communion with Christ.

John 14: 18-21; 1 Cor. 10: 16.

Fifth-day, Eleventh mo. 30.—Communion of saints.

Psalms 133: 1-3; 1 John 1: 3-7.

Sixth-day, Twelfth mo. 1.—Restoration of soul. Psalms 23: 1-6.

Seventh-day, Twelfth mo. 2.—Renewal of life. John 6: 53-58.

The obvious intention of this topic is to call the attention of Endeavorers to the significance of a rite observed in all churches, both Protestant and Catholic, except among Friends. We may freely concede that such an observance is a means of blessing to many who partake in the faith that is commanded of the Lord. How, then, shall we justify our own unique position in regard to this matter? Because we stand alone is no evidence that we are wrong. We have stood alone in a score of things until the Christian world has been forced to come to our position. That we stand alone in our position as to the disuse of the so-called ordinance is, however, no evidence that other churches stand together. What a medley of opinions are held. The Roman Catholic church says, "In the sacrament of the most holy Eucharist is contained, truly, really and substantially, the body and blood, together with the soul and divinity of our Lord Jesus Christ, and accordingly the entire Christ." The Lutheran church says, "We defend the opinion received in the entire church that in the Lord's Supper the body and blood of Christ are truly and substantially present, and are truly offered with those things that appear, viz., the bread and wine." Calvin asserted the supernatural and life-giving presence of Christ in the Lord's Supper, making the ordinance to be a special channel of spiritual blessing, but denied the "local presence of Christ" as taught by Luther. Zwingli said, "I believe—indeed I know—that the sacraments are so far from conferring grace that they do not even distribute it. . . . The Lord's Supper is nothing but a mode of recalling Christ's death and of confessing faith in Him." A prominent Methodist commentator, J. A. Beet, declares this view falls far below the great and solemn significance of the rite. If we should add to this confusion of opinions any statement of the confusion of methods of administration as to priestly or other administrators, participants, time, attitudes, etc., it would all be a hopeless medley.

We, as Friends, believe this confusion all grows out of a misunderstanding of the words and purpose of our Lord at the Paschal Supper, when the rite is supposed to have been established, and out of a misunderstanding of the trend of divine revelation as seen in the Scriptures. We do not base our view upon a mere textual criticism, or the seeming significance of a single phase, but upon what is revealed in the Bible as to the Spiritual nature of a true worship and service of God. Much of the argument in favor of the so-called ordinance is based upon their analogy to the ritual of the Old Testament, and it is inferred from thence that the human mind ever needs some such symbols to rightly conserve its conception of a relation to God, or to be the vehicle for the transmission of His grace. But even the prophets of the Old Testament saw the failure of ritualism, and the tendency of men to substitute it for the spiritual verities it was supposed to represent. Amos and Isaiah bitterly denounced the growing ritualism of their time, and their words are heard to reconcile with those of the Levitical code.

The personal life of our Lord gives no hint of an emphasis on ritualism. The trend of His teaching was steadily away from it. He was baptised of John, not because He needed to wash away sin, not because He needed to profess faith in God or begin a new life, but because He saw it was right to recognize John's mission as a prophet and to place Himself in right relation to him. For a few months He seems to have worked in conjunction with John and not far from him, adopting similar methods, though only His disciples baptized; but after John's imprisonment He entered at once upon His own ministry of the kingdom and then of His Messiahship, and we never hear another word of baptism in all His ministry. It is strange the Christian church has never been able to see the significance of this early abandonment by Jesus of any symbolism of spiritual things, and to apply the same principle in its own development. An early, incidental stage of baptism with water had probably a right place in the Apostolic church but its larger ministry to the world should have left baptism behind as Jesus did. The same is true as regards the Supper. Jesus indicates as much at the last Passover. He declares that He will never participate in the material elements again. He will henceforth drink only the wine of the new kingdom of God. How easily the church might have seen long ago that true communion with the Lord could then only be a spiritual eating and drinking. "This do, in remembrance of me" can only be rightly construed to connect the observance of the Passover with Christ instead of with the Exodus, and when the observance of Passover ceased and the words had no further significance, except as we attach a certain spiritual lesson to all eating and drinking as a perpetual symbol of the feeding of the soul upon Christ, and of the brotherhood of those who break bread together.

Many will find most difficulty in reconciling the phrase "Till he come," with the views of Friends. But it is well to remember that the writer had apparently no conception of the use to which those words have since been applied; that is to prove the permanence of the right itself. He thought of a speedy return of the Lord to establish His kingdom on earth, and then the "new wine of the kingdom" would supersede the material elements. He did not foresee how that kingdom was first coming by long, slow processes, asserting its sway over the hearts of men, then over their institutions, spiritualizing gradually the whole man and all that pertains to him. Hence his phrase "Till he come" really means observance for only a brief period of time, and not observance for centuries. Those have the true Lord's Supper who have entered into the kingdom of the Lord and whose lives are ruled by its fundamental principles. The last word of the New Testament on the true nature of communion is from John, and was written long after the rest. He says nothing of the outward bread and wine, but much about the spiritual eating and drinking. The sixth chapter of John is the climax of divine revelation concerning the true Lord's Supper.

MISSIONARY READING COURSE.

We publish this week the third article on the lessons of the new missionary reading course. For further information concerning the lessons, address Gilbert Bowles, of Oskaloosa, Iowa. It is a splendid course, and you cannot do better than to undertake it. Let missionary committees take up the matter and begin the study of missions.

- (5) The Outlook.

George Fox desired to enter the walled kingdom, and some of his co-laborers tried to go, but never reached the empire. English Friends began work in China in 1894, when Henrietta Green went to Hankow and took up her home in the family of Arnold Foster, of the L. M. S. The first permanent mission was established in 1889, at the treaty port of Chungking, by Robert J. and Mary J. Davidson. This city of 320,000 people, in far western China, is reached by a journey of nearly six weeks in a house-boat up the Yang-tse River. The work of American Friends began in 1891, with the opening of the mission at Nankin, by Ohio Yearly Meeting. Previous to this Esther H. Butler had spent two and a half years in the Methodist Hospital in that city, which prepared her for taking charge of the mission.

The Stations.—Headquarters for English Friends is still at Chungking. A monthly meeting was lately established at Sae Hung Hsien, two hundred miles northwest, where Isaac and Esther Mason and A. W. Davidson have been laboring. But on account of recent riots, in which A. W. Davidson was wounded, the missionaries have taken refuge at Chungking. Work is also done in the surrounding villages, but no permanent mission established. The center of the American Friends' work is Nankin, with a station maintained the past year at Luh Hok. With Wilbur Estes and wife as reinforcements to the corps of lady workers, it is hoped that more may be done in the surrounding districts. Within that one province (nearly 150x400 miles) are twenty million souls. A careful study of the map of China, with attention to distances, areas and population, will show how the mission planted must be thrust into this great world of heathendom.

Methods of Work.—The English friends have been diligent in pushing evangelistic and educational work. Since the streets are too narrow for gospel meetings, halls and old shops adjoining the street are used by missionaries and native helpers for daily preaching and conversation. When the shops are closed at the Chinese New Year, the work is carried on in all available places. The four schools for boys and girls—one of which is a high school—have been attended during the past year by 216 pupils. In connection with the schools, some industrial work is done in order to help students pay expenses. Meetings for women are held weekly and many are visited in their homes. During the year 1898, the two dispensaries—one at Chungking and one at Sae Hung—have been visited by 7,750 patients. They are open for men every day in the week; for women three days in the week. For some time a professional nurse, Hannah Rosher, was of great value and was appreciated by the foreigners. Leaving the field last spring on account of illness, she died at Nankin, March 21st, 1899, on her way to England. The circulation of literature is carried on extensively. At a recent civil service examination, 800 students received a gospel and a tract. The Bible School at Chungking has a membership of 142. The preaching of the gospel by the American Friends is largely done in the Nankin Street Chapel twice a week, and at two other stations, one of which is twelve miles outside the city. Here as in other localities in the empire, the Chinese are more readily reached through medical work than in any other way. Within nine months of last year there were 780 patients at the hospital and 4,500 dispensary patients. Medical calls are made to the natives and foreigners. In the "Woman's Training School," "Girl's Boarding Schools," and "Day Schools," with a total attendance of about sixty-six, much good seed is sown and some led to Christ. The orphanage guards a few little ones from surrounding evils. Bible teaching and distribution of literature are scattering the truth to many lives. The Christian Endeavor at Nankin paid $50 into the Lord's treasury last year. The workers in all these stations seek in every possible way to win souls—in the hospital, chapel, Bible class, and home. They seek to teach by life, conversation and sermon; by object lessons, pictures, and Scripture truth.

The Native Church in connection with English Friends includes two ministers, seven teachers, five other helpers, ten members and fifty-five adherents. One of the ministers, Mei Chi Hsin, has proven a valiant servant of the cross, who, during one riot last September, was left in charge of the mission at Sae Hung. The native church at Nankin numbers seventy members and probationers. The members have been supporting a station for preaching and dispensary work in one of the outposts, and also helping support another evangelist. The missionaries use much caution in admitting members and in assigning work, especially where it needs any financial support. The results cannot be tabulated but must be measured by Him who judges natives and knows the inmost heart.

The Outlook.—The reaction of the governmental powers against the radical reforms of the late emperor mark the present era as one of the crises of modern missions. But it is generally agreed by those best acquainted with the situation that the reaction is not really against the true progress of Christian civilization, but only against its being pushed too rapidly upon a nation just now arousing itself from the slumber of centuries. In this great "world" of human kind Friends have two centers of supreme importance. Chungking, in the large province of Sz-Chuan, with a population of 35,000,000, is the "Liverpool" of West China. Nankin, twice the capital of the celestial empire, a manufacturing and literary center, is located on one of the great waterways which, with engineering skill, might be navigable for 2,000 miles. The outlook is hopeful, but the workers need the prayers and support of the entire home church. We cannot pray for them intelligently unless we know their surroundings and pray for them personally. At Chungking, are Robert J. and Mary J. Davidson, Leonard and Caroline N. Wigham in charge of the Boys' School; Mira L. Cumber, principal of the Girls' School, and Elsie M. Hunt, also A. W. Davidson, Isaac and Esther Mason, who have lately been driven from Sae Hung. Edward B. and Margaret Vardon are in England on furlough. Lucy E. Harris and Henrietta Simmonds who have just gone to China, are beginning the language study. In Nankin, Esther Butler is superintendent of the work; Lucy A. Gaynor, M.D., in charge of the hospital; Mary Isabella French, M.D., treasurer, also assistant in hospital and dispensary; Lenna M. Stanley the Orphanage and Day School for women; Margaret A. Holme, chapel and visiting work; Effie Murray is busy with the Master's work, and Wilbur A. and Julia B. Estes, who this fall joined the company of workers. Let Friends everywhere feel a personal interest in all these workers and a measure of responsibility for their success.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

EVERY LIFE A PLAN OF GOD.

BY MARY LOWE DICKINSON.

Some of our readers will remember among the sermons of the late Rev. Dr. Bushnell one whose keynote was, "Every man's life a plan of God." It was full of inspiration, but its strongest encouragement lay in the suggestion that God never abandoned His plan or His purpose to make the best of every human soul. We make no attempt to quote. The sermon is at present beyond our reach, its words have died out of memory; but its impression remains after a lapse of more than a quarter of a century. It was a strength to many disheartened souls that had made a seeming failure of their lives at that time. Its prominent idea may be a strength to-day.

There is nothing incongruous in the thought that the great Father, looking down the years, taking into account the endowment and inheritance received by the child nature, and knowing all its circumstances, should plan its life. It is reasonable to think that He means it to be and to enjoy all the best, noblest and sweetest experiences which, with its nature and its environment, would be possible. It is easy to believe in a loving, restraining Spirit following the life with tender touch upon the conscience and the tendency to stray; yet leaving the child nature unforced and dominated, after all, by its own free choice.

It is easy to believe that, as life moves on and the nature in its development falls far below its best, He, whose plan if carried out, would have made a useful and happy life, mourns over the wreck caused by indifference and sin. The noblest plan of God for that life has failed. The ebbing waters may rise again, but never to the high tide that might have been possible to that individual soul. What might have been was not and will not be. Yet we could make no more serious mistake than to suppose that God abandons His plan. What seems utter failure to us may not mean utter wreck to Him. He sees, not only with purer eyes than can bear to behold iniquity, but with far-seeing eyes that make no mistakes, and He judges with compassionate heart that knoweth our frame, that remembereth that we are dust.

We are safe in believing, then, that the same love that planned to give us His own highest and best, seeing to what low estate we had fallen, plans again to get our feet out of the miry clay and set them upon a rock. It is not His ultimate best this time, perhaps; not the ideal He had for us in the beginning. That ideal was shattered, remember, by our own hand; and we are forced, to our shame, to remember that nothing from outside the soul has any power to mar or to thwart God's plan. In our own hands only lay the weapons by which our life might have been carved to immortal beauty or dwarfed and broken and destroyed.

Yet even when destruction in whole or in part has been the result of our errors, here again is a plan of God by which the best we may still be, if not the best we might have been, can be wrought out. And no matter how many times we fail to measure up to "the full stature of the perfect man" this wonderful fact holds true—that God is always drawing near, and always holding before our wayward sight a plan, new, inspiring, encouraging, by which the highest possibilities of the creature that we now are may be developed, and the highest results in nobility of character be obtained.

Are we among the souls that have fallen out of the ranks and are sitting dazed and blind by the wayside? Has God's victorious army gone marching on toward the Kingdom and are we left behind? Yet in the beat of their receding footsteps there is a throb to which our pulses are keeping time. In their shouts and songs is a voice that, floating backward, bids us rise and follow on. "Come—slowly," it says—"feebly, if you must; but come this way. You may not go as fast or as far as if you had wasted no strength in useless wandering, but, wherever your final halt may come, this is the line of march, this way the Leader passed." And nearer still, and soft, and low, speaks the voice of the Spirit, so often unheeded or despised.

"All is not lost," it murmurs, in tones that have been pleading with us since we were little children at our mother's knee. "Still is it possible to build on the ruins of God's thwarted plans for the body a temple that shall be a fit dwelling for the living God? Still is it possible to train the stunted and neglected intellectual powers until they shall grasp the purport of God's present plan. Still is it possible for the soul to come into such accord with God's latest purpose that all our powers, bodily, mental and spiritual, may be bent in trustful obedience toward helping Him to carry that plan forward."

How many times before, we hindered and thwarted Him by ignorance, by carelessness and worse! Now, may we bend every energy toward becoming co-workers with Him for the redemption of lost years, for the restoration of lost powers, for becoming the very best that He can make of us—now that we are done, once for all, with the poor, pitiful business of making ourselves. The clay in the potter's hand, that was found so poor that it would not take and keep the shape He meant, may yet be fashioned into some shape that can be made to serve. He may be forced to put it to more common uses, to make a vessel less shapely and fair than the one His love had planned, but He will never throw away one lump of clay nor cease to strive to overcome its unfitness, so long as it lies passive in His hands, however unworthy of His touch the life may be.

Unworthy enough seemed the clay with which He anointed the eyes of the blind, but His hand upon it was all that was needed to set it athrob with life and power. The result of that contact, so long ago, was that the blinded eyes were opened and another soul crept up out of darkness into His marvelous light.

That the clay may come to know and to answer the divine touch with a pulsing, radiant life is everywhere a part of the plan of God. And so long as there is clay, and so long as there is God, he who sits "blind by the wayside" may be comforted as the child is comforted who is not left alone in the dark.

New York City.

News from the Field.

A prominent Iowa Friend writes: I am glad that THE AMERICAN FRIEND finds its way into so many homes here. I am sure it is helping to bring in a new era.

A leading Friend in Kansas Yearly Meeting writes to express appreciation and thankfulness "for our excellent AMERICAN FRIENDS."

A Friend in Philadelphia sends her copy of THE AMERICAN FRIEND to Joseph Taylor, missionary in India. He and his fellow missionaries read it, and then it is sent to Friends in Australia.

The booklet on the schools and school books of Jacob and Deborah Willetts will be mailed on receipt of ten cents; sent by the Enterprise Publishing Co., Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

Nellie E. Wood, who has for two years past been studying as a graduate student in Bryn Mawr College, is this year principal of Earlham Academy, at Earlham, Iowa. The academy is in a flourishing condition, and the Friends' meeting in that place is strong and prosperous.

George A. Barton gave an address, at Twelfth Street Meeting House, Philadelphia, on the afternoon of the 17th, to an interested company of Friends. His subject was the "Religious Uses of the Bible."

A telegram received from Joseph Elkinton on the 12th states that he and his companion are in good health, and that their work among the settlements of Doukhobors, in Assiniboia, is progressing satisfactorily.

Louise Painter Round, who is well known both in the East and in the West, has recently changed her residence from Monroe, Oregon, to Mehama, Oregon. She is living in a section of country where there are no other Friends.

Joseph Neave, who is on a religious visit in this country, with a minute for service from his monthly meeting in England, attended Baltimore Yearly Meeting. His attendance was much appreciated, and his ministry was helpful.

Caleb Jenkins and Edward L. Requa both attended Baltimore Yearly Meeting, and had good service there.

John B. Wood writes from Lakewood, N. J.: The "Echo," one of the best afternoon papers in London, writes, asking our opinion upon the proposition for a peace membership card or pledge, in which all agree to vote only for those candidates who are pledged,

First, to support the employment of The Hague Arbitration Court in all disputes arising between their governments.

Second, to oppose increase of armaments.

Third (for Quakers and Tolstoyans), to vote always and only for candidates who oppose war under any circumstances.

In our reply we must add one other item—namely, that the members shall not under any circumstances war themselves, but we fear the whole thing is not feasible. At the present time the people of the nations seem almost a unit whenever a fashionable war turns up. Look at America with Spain and England with the Boers.

Francisco G. Cala writes me from Cuba, that he was brought up in the Roman Church, became a licentiate there, then found out about the Episcopal Church, joined it, but from reading the Bible felt it was not right; left it, and upon reading Murray's "Life of George Fox" was so impressed with his ideas of truth that he and his three hundred followers have become Friends. He has supported himself by selling sewing machines. In a letter he has asked me to purchase him some books, for which he has offered to pay; the only other unsatisfied want he appears to have is two dozen chairs for the dining-room at the children's home. I hope soon to join him, and report to Friends generally through the columns of THE AMERICAN FRIEND regarding this most unique Friends' meeting. They have changed their name from the Cuban Evangelical Church to the Society of Friends there.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING.

Denver, Col.—At this little meeting of Friends there has been in attendance for three weeks, Albert B. Bayes, who is on a visit to the United States and Canada to see some of the sights, and as way may open to get some knowledge of Friends. He has held the appointment for some while as elder in the monthly meeting of Brighthelm, Yorkshire, wherein are included, besides the town which gave its name, the city of Leeds, the towns of Bradford, Huddersfield, Halifax, and several others. 'On First-day evening (12th inst.), by arrangement, he gave an address on "The Distinctive Doctrines of the Society of Friends." There followed some further remarks, in answer to some questions and observations by Friends present. Albert B. Bayes is looking to go West to spend the next few months, returning to the East (Pennsylvania and New York, probably) in the spring.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING.

The ministers and workers of Spiceland and Walnut Ridge Quarterly Meetings held a joint conference, at Knightstown, Eleventh month, 7th, 1899.

There was a good attendance and much interest manifest. The subjects brought up and discussed were, "How Can We Best Hold a Congregation?" "Present Duty of the Elder to the Church," "Work of the Evangelist, Work of the Pastor, and Their Relation to Each Other," and "Scriptural Giving." The devotional exercises were given to Scripture reading, sentence prayers and songs. Everybody seemed to enjoy themselves, and went home believing it was a day well spent.

Tenth month 15th, J. L. Spicer, of the Children's Home, Cincinnati, Ohio, gave a stereopticon lecture on "The Care of Homeless Children," at Youngstown, O., under the auspices of the Mahoning County Humane Society.

Catherine M. Shipley, wife of the late Murray Shipley, has been unanimously elected an honorary member of the Shipley Literary Society in Cincinnati. Caleb Shipley recently presented the society with an excellent portrait of his father.

Elwood Scott, of Carthage, Ind., lectured in Friends' Meeting House, Cincinnati, on "The Land of the Midnight Sun." It was much appreciated. His not securing the superintendency of "The Bethel" was a disappointment to his many friends.

WILMINGTON YEARLY MEETING.

The college at Wilmington was never before in such a prosperous condition. In place of the stoves formerly used for heating, they now have six furnaces of the most improved pattern. One hundred and twenty students are enrolled, and an excellent spirit prevails.

Fairfield Quarterly Meeting was held for the first time at Walnut Creek. Despite a cold rainstorm on Sabbath the house was filled three times. In the morning John Kittrell, of Tennessee, preached a powerful sermon. At 2 p.m. Levi Mills, of Wilmington, addressed the C. E. Union, and at 7 p.m. J. L. Spicer, of Cincinnati, gave his lecture on "Home Mission Work in Mountains, Metropolis and Middle West." His recital of experiences in the Adirondacks of New York and in the slums of New York city were listened to with much interest.

Center Quarterly Meeting, held in Wilmington, was largely attended, John Kittrell preaching clear, helpful sermons, which left deep impressions upon the hearts of his hearers. On Sabbath afternoon there was the largest attendance of Christian Endeavorers at their conference ever assembled. The exercises were intensely interesting, and the work of the C. E. seems destined to become a greater power in the future years than ever in the past.

Miami Quarterly Meeting, held at New Burlington, O., was a time of special blessing. Levi Mills preached a heart-searching sermon, speaking in no uncertain way against the hurtful tendencies of the present times, viz., Intemperance, political corruption, gambling, unwise emotional wildfire in testimony, Christian science and professing above what one possesses. On Seventh-day evening J. L. Spicer lectured on "Home Missions," and also preached First-day evening. The C. E. Conference was conducted by Mrs. Ella Barrett and a fine programme was rendered.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING.

Friends' School, at Hillside, Indian Territory, has a large attendance this year. There are thirty pupils boarding in the home, and forty-five day pupils who attend the school.

Eva Watson is principal. John M. Watson, formerly pastor of Skiatook Monthly Meeting and superintendent of the school, is absent this year, and Albert L. Copeland, of Bridgeport, Ind., has taken his place. Mrs. J. W. Baudel has charge of the primary school, and Rebecca P. Lyon, of Bellefonte, Pa., of the music.

Anna J. Winslow, whose former home has been at Rock Creek, Kansas, expects to labor in evangelistic work in the limits of Mount Ayr Quarterly Meeting during the winter. Her address will be Alton, Kansas.

David Gidley has moved from Clafin to La Crosse, Kansas, to engage in pastoral work in La Crosse Monthly Meeting.

Wm. P. and Abbie C. Haworth, after attending their own yearly meeting, at Wichita, Kan., in Tenth month, entered upon the general gospel work, for which they had been liberated by their home monthly and quarterly meetings. Three weeks were spent in Kansas visiting some of the meetings in which they had formerly resided and labored, and mingling socially with their many former acquaintances.

One week was spent in Northern Iowa, visiting with their old son, who was just recovering from an attack of fever.

They were in attendance at all the sessions of Vermilion Quarterly Meeting, held at Vermilion Grove, Ill., Eleventh month 10th, 11th and 12th.

This was the early home of Wm. P. Haworth, and the quarterly meeting by which his gift in the ministry was recognized in the spring of 1870.

They anticipate attending the sessions of Bloomingdale and Thorntown Quarterly Meetings, and will then hold a series of meetings at Georgetown, Ill., beginning the evening of the 29th of the Eleventh month.

J. Howard Brown and wife are to begin a series of meetings at Emporia about Eleventh month 12th.

Martilla Cox and her sister held meetings at the University, at Wichita, for a week following the close of yearly meeting, and went from there to Garden City, at which place they were to close their meetings about the 7th.

Ira S. Bundy, of Sterling, has a minute from his home meeting liberating him for work in several quarterly meetings. He attended Rose Hill Quarter, held at Argonia, Eleventh month 3d to 5th, and was greatly blessed in the ministry.

Nathan W. Ridgway is spending the winter holding meetings and visiting families in the limits of Iowa Monthly Meeting, Oklahoma.

Springdale Quarterly Meeting is to be held at Leavenworth City, Eleventh month 23d to 26th.

Elizabeth Butler, of Barclay, is to spend most of the winter in evangelistic work in the limits of Stella Quarterly Meeting, Oklahoma Territory.

Henry and Melissa Fellow are recognized as pastors at East Wichita Meeting. The work seems to be reviving under their care.

President Edmund Stanley and wife gave a very pleasant reception in honor of the return home of their son Fred with his bride. A most congenial company of friends and neighbors enjoyed to the utmost their hospitality.

Parker Moon is located at Lowell, Kansas, as pastor. The academy at that place is in a prosperous condition.

ALASKA.

George W. Harvey writes from Douglas City, Alaska: I send you the glad tidings that we have organized a Y. P. S. C. E. here. It was organized on Tenth month, 27th, 1899, with sixteen active members, who are true, zealous Christians, and eight associate members.

The following is a list of the officers: Charles Replogle, pastor; Augusta Johnson, president; S. Annett, vice-president; Lottie Caromney, recording secretary; Geo. W. Harvey, corresponding secretary; H. Day, treasurer; Ellen Harvey, librarian.

The society will be known as the Christian Endeavor of Friends, and will meet every Sixth-day evening, at the new Friends' Meeting House.

Since the revival meetings last month we have many young converts, who will make this society a power for God. Our meetings are well attended and a lively spirit manifested, so we have a bright future for our society.

We have been occupying our new meeting house for about three months. The attendance is good. We had 201 in our Sunday school last Sunday.

The house is not seated as yet, only temporarily, but we hope to be able to soon accomplish that.

This is a town of about 2,500 inhabitants, and we have two churches, besides the Friends'. The only occupation is mining, in which this place excels any place in the world of its size.

Our pastor, Charles Replogle, is well liked, and doing much good for God's cause. Jennie Lawrence is also a true worker for Christ, and she has done wonders among the Indian people.

We should like sample literature for C. E. work; also price-list of same. We shall be pleased to correspond with other societies.

We remain your brothers and sisters in Christ Jesus, GEO. W. HARVEY, Corresponding Secretary.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING.

Kokomo, Ind.—Amos M. Kenworthy commenced meetings at Kokomo on Second-day night after Quarterly Meeting, Tenth month 30th, and continued up to Seventh-day morning, Eleventh month 11th, holding two meetings a day, except the first two days and the last one—twenty-three meetings in all. His teaching was very clear, and directly applicable to the needs of the church. Besides some conversions and renewals and some sanctified, a number of the leading members took advance ground in their Christian experience, thereby bringing great good to the church, and we are praying and expecting still greater results yet to follow. One sister came over from Hazel Dell and received a clear evidence of her sanctification, and reported the good work going on at that meeting. As a result of the clear teaching given during the quarterly meeting persons are still coming out into the full light and liberty of the gospel as it is in Christ Jesus, and are enabled from full hearts still to "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

JESSE T. TURNER.

Russiaville, Ind.—Revival services were begun at this place on Tenth month 22d, and continued for three weeks, conducted by our pastor, Nathan D. Knight. He was ably assisted in the meetings by Ellis A. Wells, of Horton, Ind. The Lord graciously blessed these anointed servants in the ministration of His word, and their preaching was in the demonstration and power of the Spirit, bringing conviction to many hearts, resulting in the conversion of a few and the renewal of a great many. Our pastor was wonderfully favored of the Lord in his clear exposition of the scripture concerning sanctification, and some were led to comprehend it as they never had before, and were enabled to take definite steps in faith and consecration to God. The church has been greatly strengthened and revived, for which we can truly say, "Praise the Lord." Four requests for membership were received, and the prospects are favorable for more. We have, indeed, had times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord, and in this increased zeal and activity, for the cause of Christ our hearts are full of thanksgiving and praise to our Heavenly Father, as we recognize it a special blessing from His divine hand.

OHIO YEARLY MEETING.

THE CLEVELAND BIBLE TRAINING SCHOOL.

It was my privilege recently to stop in Cleveland, Ohio, and to find that I could attend the Second-day prayer meeting, which convenes at 3 p.m. and closes when it seems best. There were about forty assembled in the attractive rooms. The singing was inspiring, but what impressed me most was the profound sense of the presence of the Holy Spirit. Every student had a Bible, and used it quickly in turning to passages cited.

Then the holy hush as we bowed in prayer. The utter prostration of heart, and earnest seeking to know the will of God. The contrition and self abasement all united to impress the mind of a visitor with the excellent and favorable conditions for spiritual growth surrounding the students. There was a fervor, consecration, and alertness of mind to grasp the truth and improve their opportunities which was most encouraging. The rooms are comfortable, and have a delightful atmosphere of home-likeness. Wm. P. Pinkham and his wife have pleasant apartments in the institute, and are the persons eminently fitted by graces of person, mind, and heart for the work. Every person should read Professor Pinkham's new book, "The Lamb of God." For conciseness of statement, regarding the fundamental truths of the gospel, it commends itself to earnest Bible students.

I consider the entire Society of Friends owes a debt to the indefatigable zeal of Walter and Emma B. Malone in opening such a school, and the way to repay it is to encourage young people, clearly called to Christian service, to spend a year there.

J. L. SPICER.

Died.

BEAN.—Died, on Tenth month 31st, 1899, at College Park, San Jose, Cal., Elizabeth Bean, aged 97 years. With an unusual retention of bodily and mental vigor, she continued her daily round of duty and of loving service to those around her, and her constant attendance of meetings for worship until her last illness in Sixth month last. Her convictions had long been strongly grounded in the spiritual verities of the gospel of Christ, and her faith and hope wavered not in the last conflicts.

CADWALLADER.—Died, in Kansas City, Mo., Ninth month 4th, 1899, Phebe F. Cadwallader, in the 76th year of her age. She was an active, energetic Christian worker, and an elder in Kansas City Monthly Meeting.

GIFFORD.—Died, suddenly at Central Village, Mass., Eleventh month 3d, 1899, James A. Gifford, in the 58th year of his age. He was a lifelong member of Westport Monthly Meeting.

News and Events.

News from South Africa is meagre. Ladysmith, Mafeking and Kimberley are still under siege by the Boers, but are reported as holding their own, anxiously awaiting reinforcements. An attack upon a British armored train, at Estcourt, last week, resulted in the capture of fifty-six British officers and soldiers, including Lieutenant Winston Churchill, son of Lady Randolph Churchill. Large detachments of British troops are arriving at Cape Town and Durban with complete equipments and ample supplies for aggressive movements against the Boers. About 40,000 British troops are expected to reach the scene by December 5th. This the Boers are aware of, and will undoubtedly make desperate efforts to reduce the beleaguered cities before the reinforcements now on the way arrive. The Boer invasion of Cape Colony has resulted in the seizure by them of the towns of Aliwal North, Colesburg and Burgersdorp, over which the flag of the Republic was floated.

Though the roads in Luzon are still difficult to travel upon, the campaign has again begun most actively, and despatches indicate that Aguinaldo and his army is now actually hard pressed. Reports from General Lawton state that a series of skirmishes between San Fabian and San Nicholas have taken place, in which the Filipinos were driven northwest, with a loss of men and stores. SURE TO ASK.

The Kind of Coffee When Postum Is Well Made.

"Three great coffee drinkers were my old school friend and her two daughters.

"They are always complaining and taking medicine. I determined to give them Postum Food Coffee instead of coffee when they visited me, so without saying anything to them about it, I made a big pot of Postum the first morning, using four heaping teaspoons to the pint of water, and let it boil twenty minutes, stirring down occasionally.

"Before the meal was half over, each one passed up the cup to be refilled, remarking how fine the coffee was. The mother asked for a third cup and inquired as to the brand of coffee I used. I didn't answer her question just then, for I had heard her say a while before that she didn't like Postum Food Coffee unless it was more than half old-fashioned coffee.

"After breakfast I told her that the coffee she liked so well at breakfast was pure Postum Food Coffee, and the reason she liked it was because it was properly made, that is, it was boiled long enough to bring out the flavor. I have been brought up from a nervous, wretched invalid, to a fine condition of physical health by leaving off coffee and using Postum Food Coffee.

"I am doing all I can to help the world out of coffee slavery, to Postum freedom, and have earned the gratitude of many, many friends." Myra J. Tuller, 1023 Troost Avenue, Kansas City, Mo.

retary of the Interior has been captured, and is held by the American force at San Isidro. General MacArthur entered Gerona, on the Manila-Dagupan Railway, north of Tarlac, on the 18th, and was welcomed by the inhabitants.

A widespread revolutionary movement is reported to exist in the United States of Colombia. The outlook is grave. The Government is recruiting an army by impressment under martial law, and is levying forced loans in various cities of the republic, the Colombians having been taxed $25 each at twelve per cent. interest, with the alternative of $100 fine or enlistment. Foreigners are regarded with suspicion, the Government claiming that the strength and popularity of the revolution are due to foreign support.

There is some uneasiness in New York city over the belief that there are cases of bubonic plague on board a vessel which arrived at that port on the 18th from Brazil. Quarantine officers are taking rigorous measures to prevent any spread of the disease, and the Advisory Board of Physicians has been called in for consultation regarding the cases. New York's system of quarantine is excellent, and it is not likely that the disease, if such it actually is, will get beyond the quarantine station.

The Secretary of the Treasury made the announcement, on the 15th, that the Government would buy $25,000,000 of 5 per cent. United States bonds of 1904, and fours of 1907.

Philadelphia's incubus, the Public Buildings Commission, still rests heavily upon the city. Architect Powell has submitted to the Commission an "approximate estimate" of the cost of completing the buildings within two years from January 1st, 1900, if the money should be available. He makes the total $2,883,365. To this sum is added $729,500 for salaries, wages of employes for maintenance of buildings during the two years, fuel, stationery, unpaid bills, etc., making the grand total, $3,612,865.

The annual report of Third Assistant Postmaster General E. C. Madden, for the fiscal year just closed, shows a decrease in the postal deficiency from last year's report of almost 27 per cent. The total receipts from all sources were over $95,000,000. Over 4,700,000 stamps in all have been supplied to the Philippines, 14,080,000 to Porto Rico, 18,420,000 to Cuba, and 45,000 to Guam, during the fiscal year. New York and Chicago mail 35 per cent. of the entire second class mail matter.

It is not often that a dog gets a meal worth twenty dollars, but such a thing happened in Narbonne, France, recently. A man eating in a restaurant took a one-hundred-franc note (equal to a twenty-dollar bill) from his pocket to pay for his dinner. As it lay on the table a gust of wind puffed it into the soup. Fishing it out, he placed it on the edge of the table to dry, whence it slipped to the floor. Just then along came a hungry little poodle, and, sniffing at the note, he got a good whiff of the soup, snatched up the note and swallowed it. The owner of the note then sued the owner of the poodle for the one hundred francs, and the courts have decided that the latter must pay.

TIME TABLES ADJUSTED.

Managers of Pennsylvania Railroad and Connections Arrange Fall Schedules.

A schedule meeting of the Pennsylvania Railroad, Southern Railway, Florida East Coast Railway, Plant System, Atlantic Coast Line, Norfolk & Western, and Chesapeake & Ohio Railways was held at the Pennsylvania Railroad Station, in this city, Thursday, and remained in session until a late hour in the evening, important changes of schedules being determined upon.

The annual announcement of the operation of the New York and Florida limited, leaving New York, Twenty-third Street, over the Pennsylvania Railroad, at 12.40 p. m., and Washington, over the Southern Railway, at 6.35 p. m., arriving at Savannah 10.35 a. m., Jacksonville 2.35 p. m., St. Augustine 3.45 p. m., and Port Tampa 10.05 p. m. the following day, was made. It is thought that the hours of departure from eastern cities and arrival at the palatial Florida hotels, as arranged by this schedule, are the most satisfactory to the large tourist travel that have yet been operated. Other trains over the Pennsylvania Railroad and Southern Railway will leave New York at 12.05 a. m. and 2.55 p. m., the former carrying the United States fast mail, and having through Pullman cars to Miami, Florida, and connecting with steamer for Havana. The fast mail for Atlanta, Montgomery, Birmingham, Mobile and New Orleans will leave New York at 12.05 a. m., as at present. The Washington and Chattanooga limited, leaving New York at 2.25 p. m., and the Southwestern limited, leaving New York at 4.25 P. M. for New Orleans, Memphis, and other points, remain upon their present fast schedule. New train service from Cincinnati, Ohio, and Louisville, Ky., for Florida points via the Southern Railway, was also announced, the Cincinnati, Florida and Havana limited, leaving Cincinnati at 8.30 a. m., Louisville 7.45 p. m., and arrives at Jacksonville 8.30 a. m., the following day. Another train leaves Cincinnati at 8.00 p. m., Louisville 7.45 p. m., and arrives at Jacksonville 10.00 the following night, and Tampa the following morning. The Pullman and dining car service was announced as more extensive and complete than heretofore, the New York and Florida limited and the Southwestern limited being equipped with library, observation, drawing room and compartment cars.—"Washington Post," Saturday, November 4th, 1899.

Chas. L. Hopkins, District Passenger Agent Southern Railway, 828 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa., will be pleased to furnish rates, time tables, and any further information.

PERSONALLY-CONDUCTED TOURS VIA PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD.

Season of 1899-1900.

The Pennsylvania Railroad Company announces the following personally-conducted tours for the season of 1899 and 1900:

Mexico and California.—A forty-five-day tour will leave New York, Philadelphia and Harrisburg February 13. Fourteen days will be spent in Mexico and eighteen in California. The party will travel over the entire route by the "Mexico and California Special," the finest train that crosses the continent.

Florida.—Four tours to Jacksonville will leave New York and Philadelphia January 23, February 6 and 20, and March 6. The first three admit of a stay of two weeks in the "Flowery State." Tickets for the fourth tour will be good to return by regular trains until May 31, 1900.

Old Point Comfort, Richmond and Washington.—Five tours will leave New York and Philadelphia February 3, March 3 and 31, April 14 and 28.

Old Point Comfort.—Six tours will leave New York and Philadelphia December 28, February 3, March 3 and 31, April 14 and 28.

Washington.—Six tours will leave New York and Philadelphia December 28, January 18, February 15, March 15, April 10, and May 3.

For detailed information apply to Tourist Agent, 1196 Broadway, New York; 800 Fulton Street, 4 Court Street, Brooklyn; 789 Broad Street, Newark, N. J.; or Geo. W. Boyd, Assistant General Passenger Agent, Philadelphia.

A Scotch visitor to the Carlyles, in Cheyne Row, was much struck with the sound-proof room which the sage had contrived for himself in the attic, lighted from the top, and where no light or sound from outside could penetrate. "My certes, this is fine," cried the old friend with unconscious sarcasm; "here ye may write and study all the rest of your life, and no human being be one bit the wiser."

WHAT WE OWE OTHERS.

The world is very full of sorrow and trial, and we cannot live among our fellow men and be true without sharing their loads. If we are happy, we must hold the lamp of our happiness so that its beams will fall upon the shadowed heart. If we have no burden, it is our duty to put our shoulders under the load of others. Selfishness must die, or else our own heart's life must be frozen within us. We soon learn that we cannot live for ourselves and be Christians, that the blessings that are given to us are really for other people, and that we are only God's ministers to carry them in Christ's name to those for whom they were intended.—J. R. Miller.

WHY STAND YE IDLE?

God never goes to the lazy or the idle when He needs men for His service. When God wants a worker he calls a worker. When He has work to be done He goes to those who are already at work. When God wants a great servant He calls the busy man. Scripture and history attest this truth.

Moses was busy with the flock at Horeb. Gideon was busy threshing wheat by the wine press. Saul was busy searching for his father's lost beasts. David was busy caring for his father's sheep. Elisha was busy bearing the king's wine cup. Amos was busy following the herds. Peter and Andrew were busy casting a net into the sea. James and John were busy mending their nets. Matthew was busy collecting custom. Saul was busy persecuting the friends of Jesus. William Carey was busy making shoes. John Milton was busy mastering classics. Martin Luther was busy performing penance. John Bunyan was busy tinkering pots and pans. Roger Williams was busy as a stenographer. Adoniram Judson was busy investigating religious truth. Charles Spurgeon was busy as a teacher.

God never called an idler into His service. The indolent young man who looks longingly toward the gospel ministry will never get a call from God. The busy workers are the men God wants.—"The Evangelist."

REMOVAL OF THE NEGRO IMPOSSIBLE.

All attempts to settle the question of the negro in the South by his removal from this country have so far failed, and I think they are likely to fail, says Booker T. Washington in the November "Atlantic." The next census will most likely show that we have about ten millions of black people in the United States. About eight millions of these are in the Southern States. We have almost a nation within a nation. The negro population in the United States lacks but two millions of being as large as the whole population of Mexico. It is nearly twice as large as the population of the Dominion of Canada. Our black population is equal to the combined populations of Switzerland, Greece, Honduras, Nicaragua, Cuba, Uruguay, Santo Domingo, Paraguay and Costa Rica. When we consider, in connection with these facts, that the race has doubled itself since its freedom, and is still increasing, it hardly seems possible for any one to consider seriously any scheme of emigration from America as the method of solution. At most, even if the government were to provide the means, but a few hundred thousand could be transported each year. The yearly increase in population would more than likely overbalance the number transported. Even if it did not, the time required to get rid of the negro by this method would perhaps be fifty or seventy-five years.

Some have advised that the negro leave the South, and take up his residence in the Northern States. I question whether this would leave him any better off than he is in the South, when all things are considered. It has been my privilege to study the condition of our people in nearly every part of America; and I say without hesitation that, with some exceptional cases, the negro is at his best in the Southern States. While he enjoys certain privileges in the North that he does not have in the South, when it comes to the matter of securing property, enjoying business opportunities and employment, the South presents a far better opportunity than the North. Few colored men from the South are as yet able to stand up against the severe and increasing competition that exists in the North, to say nothing of the unfriendly influence of labor organizations, which in some way prevents black men in the North from securing employment in the line of skilled labor.—Booker T. Washington, in the November "Atlantic."

NATURAL FOOD.

For Highly Organized People.

How to select food that will make a sick body well is a problem. There are food experts that make that question the study of their lives; to know what the human body is built of, and just where to look for the nerve elements in the grains, fruits and other forms of food furnished by Mother Nature.

The food Grape-Nuts was originated for a reason, and with the above facts in view. It is perhaps the most popular food on the American table to-day, for while it has been in use but a little over a year, many of the best people have discovered its unquestioned value.

It is predigested and ready for immediate assimilation. It is also thoroughly cooked at the factory, and therefore ready for instant service. Grape-Nuts can be digested by a child in arms, and is appreciated by the athlete because of its flavor and strength. Sold by all first-class grocers, and made by Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., at their factories in Battle Creek.

THE BANK OF HOPE.

It is well to draw upon the bank of hope, as well as upon the bank of experience. When thy cup is full of sorrow, and thy face is covered with shame, and not a ray of light fall on thy dreary pall, remember that there is a history full of grace behind us; and it is all wrapped up in the name of Him who is the hope of every contrite heart. But take good heed that your hope is not a vague hope. See that you believe in God firmly, and that you lay hold upon an actual promise of His Word, on some statute of His kingdom, very tightly; for then you may hope to your heart's content. Though you cannot see the way of deliverance, you can feel that the Lord holds you by the hand. Now plead with him: "Lord, Thou art my only hope. Thou knowest I have no hope anywhere else. I am clean driven to despair, except Thou look upon me in grace." This is good pleading. Every one has a hope somewhere. To the miserable there remains no other medicine. Deprived of this, the sufferer would grow desperate, and his melancholy would drive him to the verge of madness; but there is a hope of some kind in every man's bosom.—C. H. Spurgeon.

OUR POPULATION IS 75,000,000.

Fifty Thousand Enumerators Must Gather the Census in a Month.

In June of next year the people of the United States will be counted for the twelfth time since the establishment of our government. "It will require about 50,000 enumerators," writes Clifford Howard, in the November "Ladies' Home Journal," "To take the census, and their work must be finished in one month's time, or by the first week of July, 1900. That means that about 75,000,000 people must be recorded in thirty days, or at the rate of two and a half million a day. The rate will be even greater than this, however, for in towns and cities of 8,000 inhabitants the enumeration must be completed within two weeks. The enumerators will not be permitted to have any assistance in the work; it must be done by them in person, except in such sections of the country as contain a great many foreigners, where the employment of interpreters will be allowed, as otherwise it would be next to impossible to secure the necessary data. The enumerators will be paid for their services in accordance with the amount of work they are called upon to do."—"Ladies' Home Journal."

DR. A. J. GORDON'S LAST MESSAGE.

"Forget not that your first and principal business as a disciple of Christ is to give the gospel to those who have it not. He who is not a missionary Christian will be a missing Christian when the great day comes for bestowing the rewards of service. Therefore:

"Ask yourself daily what the Lord would have you do in connection with the work of carrying the news of salvation to the perishing millions. Search carefully whether He would have you go yourself to the heathen if you have the youth and fitness required for the work. Or, if you cannot go in person:

"Inquire diligently what blood mortgage there is upon your property in the interest of foreign missions—how much you owe to the heathen, because of what you owe to Christ for redeeming you with His precious blood. I warn you that it will go hard with you when your Lord comes to reckon with you if he finds your wealth invested in superfluous luxuries or hoarded up in needless accumulations instead of being sacredly devoted to giving the gospel to the lost.

"But remember that consecrated giving will be impossible unless there be first a consecrated giver. Therefore, I counsel

A HOPE AND A PEACE.

"There is a hope that cometh after sorrow,"
Of hope surrendered, not of hope fulfilled;
A peace that looketh not upon to-morrow,
But calmly on a tempest that is stilled.

A peace which lives not now in joy's excesses
Nor in the happy life of love secure;
But in the unerring strength the heart possesses
Of conflicts won while learning to endure.

A peace there is, in sacrifice secluded;
A life subdued, from will and passion free;
'Tis not the peace which over Eden brooded,
But that which triumphed in Gethsemane.

—Author not known.

HOW A QUAKER SHOULD MEET THE PROBLEMS OF OUR TIME.

EVERYBODY who lives with his eyes open, and who studies at all the tendencies of the times, knows that we are passing through a crucial epoch in the history of religious life and thought. No single period in human history has been marked by such momentous discoveries in the realm of nature, or by such transforming advances in knowledge as this last half century has seen. But while the scholars have been solving the riddles of our visible universe, they have at the same time brought before us new and more difficult questions concerning eternal and spiritual things. Christians have been compelled to face stubborn facts, and some have suffered shipwreck of their faith because they saw no way to adjust the old to the new, or to keep the new wine in the old bottles.

There have been various ways of meeting what is often called "modern thought." One course has been to defy it or ignore it; to call it bad names, and to refuse it any place or influence in religious matters. It is the same position which the Catholic Church took at the time of the "reawaking" in the fifteenth century—a position which proved in the end disastrous and almost destructive to the church, as it always must. It never does to defy or ignore the tendencies of thought. Whether right or wrong they must be reckoned with clearly and intelligently, and not blindly.

Another course has been to go back to an excessive ritualism and reliance on church traditions. This appears in what is called the "high church movement." It is a revival of mediævalism and priestly authority. Seeing faith threatened by the tendencies of thought, its leaders fall back on the "sacred traditions of the church," and bring in again a religion which is dangerously near superstition, and which, to say the least, is more dangerous to spiritual Christianity than modern thought could possibly be.

The trouble is that neither of these two classes of Christians meet "modern thought" with any constructive principle. It is an irrepressible conflict, and with either of these two methods religion is bound to suffer, ultimately, in the shock.

Now there is a fundamental, constructive principle in Quakerism which enables us to meet the problems of our time safely, and to be the prophets of the era IF WE ONLY WOULD.

We have always taught that religion should be a personal, immediate relation between God and man; that salvation begins with a new creation in the man, wrought directly by the living Christ, and that the whole spiritual work is witnessed in the consciousness of the believer and in his changed life. It is a "demonstration" which can no more be doubted or shaken than the surest law of science can. We test every fact of religion in our own souls, and prove its truth in experience. Does any person doubt the Divinity of Christ? We say, "See the divine work He has wrought in us through the power of His resurrection." Does any man question whether there be any Holy Spirit? We say, "We know by personal experience that He reveals Himself in us and gives us strength to overcome in the midst of temptation and struggle." Does any one attack the inspiration of the Bible? We say, "We test its inspiration by the way it inspires us and by the effect its message has upon our lives. We know God speaks through it, for we find Him in it."

The Quaker again realizes that the whole end and purpose of Christianity is to bring men to God and to make them consciously sons of God. It is God's method of making "new creatures." It makes no difference what the conclusions of science may be about any fact whatsoever—whether it deals with the origin of the world, the beginning of the human race, the authorship of the Biblical books, or the law of gravitation—we have one single question to ask, viz., Is there any way for men to come to God and to become sons? And we answer—no matter what science or modern thought may say in its field—"Yes, Jesus Christ is the Door. Through Him God has come to us, and through Him we have come to God, and now 'He has sent forth His Spirit into our hearts, whereby we cry, Abba, Father.'" It is a beautiful, a glorious experience of fact, and the soul that realizes its meaning will see that it lies beyond the touch of any scientific discovery. Let us become apostles and prophets of this constructive truth that God is still revealing Himself to human hearts, and demonstrating His transforming power in every life which opens itself to Him. This kind of FAITH IS THE VICTORY. We do not speak for modern thought, but we do speak for a kind of Christianity which lies beyond the reach of the thought which now is or that which is to come. The gates of Hades cannot prevail against a religion which builds on this CONSCIOUS FAITH in the Son of God.

UNIFORM DISCIPLINE.

AN editorial in the Philadelphia "Friend" for Eleventh month 18th, under the caption, "A Liberty for Bondage," opposes the adoption of a uniform discipline for all the yearly meetings, no matter what the provisions of such discipline may be. The ground taken is that they who are united to Christ are united to each other, and He becomes constitution enough, and the conclusion is drawn that the preparation of a uniform discipline "is a confession of the weakness both of a disintegrating liberty and a disintegrating bondage." Whatever force there may be in this argument certainly applies equally well, and, we believe, with more force, to the adoption of a discipline by a single yearly meeting. If the position taken in the article is a true and safe one, there should be no bond but that of the Spirit, and no written constitution or visible authority which could ever come between the individual and the Spirit. We do not care to comment upon this position. But we have been much interested to find this week from meeting records that Philadelphia Yearly Meeting made a proposition in 1805 to New England and New York Yearly Meetings that their three disciplines should be made uniform. The following extract is taken from the records of the Meeting for Sufferings (now called Representative Meeting) of New England Yearly Meeting:

"The Committee on General Services made the following report, which was adopted for a minute of this meeting:

"The Yearly Meeting of Philadelphia, having expressed a concern, that our disciplines should be as uniform as may be, and it being a desirable object to this Meeting, we commit the subject to the attention of the Meeting for Sufferings, to correspond with the Committee of that Meeting, and the Meeting for Sufferings in New York, on the subject to ripen the same for the consideration of our next Yearly Meeting.

"Extracted from the Minutes of our Yearly Meeting held on Rhode Island by adjournments from the 16th. to the 19th. of 6th. mo. 1805.

By Obadiah Davis, Clerk this year.

"Which being considered, Moses Brown, Thomas Arnold, William Rotch Jun. and Samuel Rodman are appointed in conformity thereto, to transmit our Discipline to the Committee in Philadelphia, and the Meeting of Sufferings in New York, and communicate our unity with the proposition so far as local circumstances may admit, and in an especial manner, that our Discipline, as respects personal rights may exhibit a strict uniformity, and report their proceedings at our next meeting.

"Smithfield R. I. the 12th. of the 2d. mo. 1806."

New England was evidently ready to fall in line with the plan, while New York Meeting for Sufferings reports to New England, 9th of 12th mo., 1806, that they feel a hesitation about accepting the idea. There seems to have been no thought in 1805 in Philadelphia that a uniform discipline which brought the practices and methods of our branch of the church into harmony and unity was "a confession of the weakness both of a disintegrating liberty and a disintegrating bondage!"

EDITORIAL NOTES.

OUR friend, Daniel Hill, passed away on the 15th of this month. His death removes from among us one of the interesting figures of the present generation, and an untiring worker. He early espoused the cause of peace, and his faith and zeal were almost unbounded. He was never too old to throw himself into any movement which might possibly help bring the new era of peace on earth. He was always interested in a practical way in the production and dissemination of Friends' periodical literature, and he has probably for half a century been a messenger of the gospel of Christ. He was, in a most genuine sense, a good man. We shall hope to have an adequate account of his life in due time.

THE picture on our cover this week is a section of a picture representing a Quaker meeting in Rotterdam. The original picture was painted by the Dutch artist, Egbert Hemskirk. The figure on the right is supposed to be George Fox, and the one in front, with one foot on the step, is William Penn. The artist dresses them both in Dutch garb, and the picture is somewhat of a caricature, though the artist was a contemporary of these two Quaker apostles, and for that reason the picture is worth consideration.

GENERAL CHURCH NOTES.

It has been reported that the Mormons will build a temple in Louisville, Ky.

Brazil, which is usually thought of as a wholly Catholic country, has a large body of Protestants of different denominations. The number is estimated at about 200,000.

The Presbyterian Church raised $140,000 for missions last year, and has representatives at work in the New Hebrides, Trinidad, Demarara, India, China, Korea, Formosa, and among the Indians of the Northwest.

The Sultan of Turkey has issued an irade granting clemency to the Armenians. The cause which has prompted this, and its meaning, do not appear to be entirely clear, though it probably has a political significance.

Dr. R. S. Storrs, pastor of the Church of the Pilgrims, in Brooklyn, has recently resigned, after a pastorate of fifty-three years. He, with one other minister, was the oldest settled pastor in the Congregational denomination in the East.

In Egypt, with a total population of 9,734,000, the British and Foreign Bible Society last year circulated 23,705 copies of the Bible, or portions of it. Besides these, 60,000 copies of religious books and tracts were distributed in different parts of Egypt.

The Protestant awakening in France is so pronounced that the Reformed Churches of that country are unable to supply pastors for all the demands made. A year ago an evangelist was sent to a village called Le Monteil, where for a long time there has not been a single Protestant Christian. In the vicinity are a hundred monasteries and convents, and the place has been a veritable Catholic stronghold. In the short space of twelve months this minister had gathered together a Protestant congregation of one hundred and fifty persons, and had firmly entrenched himself in the affection of his people. He has also been besought by the people of twenty-two neighboring villages to come and preach to them the Gospel.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

WESTWARD THE COURSE OF QUAKER EMPIRE TAKES ITS WAY.

BY JOSHUA L. BAILY.

Kansas Yearly Meeting was held in the Tenth month of this year, at Wichita, Kansas—a busy city of about 20,000 population, where not many years ago there were only the Indian and buffalo. About midway between the eastern and western boundaries of Kansas, and ten railroads diverging therefrom to as many different points of the compass, Wichita is easily accessible from all parts. Many of the Friends, however, came to the yearly meeting in their own conveyances. This was especially the case with the Friends from Oklahoma—about forty in number—who came in their great white canvass-covered farm wagons—men and women, parents and grandparents, little children and babes in the arms of their mothers. They came from 100 to 120 miles, or three days' journey, bringing with them provisions, cooking utensils, etc., in their wagons, and with two small tents they found sufficient shelter near where the yearly meeting was held, and their horses were tethered beside them. There were also a number of Friends from the Indian Territory, and among them several Indian Quakers of the Modoc and Sac and Fox tribes—altogether a very interesting group.

IN JOINT SESSION.

The yearly meeting was held in the assembly hall of the Friends' University—an institution about which I will have something to write hereafter. This hall comfortably seated about nine hundred persons, and this was about the number of persons usually in attendance. The men and women met in "joint session." For the most part they were the representatives of an agricultural community. Not so many as a half a dozen either of men or women wore the distinctive garb known as "the plain dress," so nearly universal among Friends of less than half a century ago. The men usually dressed in grey. There was very little "broadcloth" in evidence, while the women wore every variety of fabric and color, regard for utility and economy evidently having had chief consideration.

The sessions of the meeting usually commenced by the singing of a hymn started by some one in the audience and it was noticeable that before the singing had quite concluded those standing about the doors had taken seats and the meeting had settled into quietness. Then, after a brief devotional silence, some one offered prayer. A further period of silence ensued, and the clerk proceeded with the business of the meeting. Both the singing and the prayers seemed to me without pre-arrangement.

YEARLY MEETING CLERKS.

The clerkships of the meeting differ from what is usual in the East. There are four clerks, having the following special functions: Presiding, recording, reading and announcing. The two positions first named are filled by men and the others by women.

For the most responsible of these positions the present incumbent, Edmund Stanley, has eminent fitness. Late State Superintendent of Public Instruction, he is now president of Friends' University, and an acknowledged minister. His conduct of the business of the meeting was marked with quick intelligence, becoming dignity and Christian courtesy.

It is made the duty of the presiding clerk to introduce the business of each session, to direct to a large extent the course of procedure, and to sum up and announce what he believes to be the sense or judgment of the meeting as to any subject which has been under consideration; and having so announced, if the meeting is satisfied therewith, the recording clerk makes a minute accordingly. Occasionally on matters of minor importance the clerk would ascertain the judgment of the meeting by requesting a show of hands; thus little time was wasted, but on matters of more serious import conclusions were reached, after full consideration and discussion, in the manner which has always obtained in business meetings of the Society of Friends. It was gratifying to notice that there did not appear to be any parties in the meeting; none appeared to have private or selfish ends to gratify. The expression was not confined to a few. None seemed to wait for the leadership or dictation of another. Men and women, old and young, participated with an equality of right, and yet with the utmost deference to age and experience, and in brotherly love and condescension.

WELCOME TO VISITORS.

It should not be omitted to mention that at the opening session, immediately after calling the names of the delegates from the quarterly meetings, the credentials of the visiting ministers and others were read, each being requested to rise in his seat as his name was announced, and thus were they individually presented to the meeting. The presiding clerk, on behalf of the meeting, extended a cordial welcome to the visitors from other yearly meetings, including some who were present without credentials, and invited them to participate in the business and exercises of the meeting. On the spacious platform, and immediately in the rear of the clerks' tables, there were a dozen chairs or more which were occupied, not by the ministers and elders of Kansas, but by the visitors from other yearly meetings, for whom these seats were always courteously reserved.

EPISTOLARY CORRESPONDENCE.

The epistles from other yearly meetings, which were read two or more at a session, brought to view the condition of the Society in its widely scattered fields of service in this country and beyond the sea, and awakened a lively interest in the meeting. The presiding clerk commented in a very appropriate and impressive manner upon the evidence afforded, that although living in countries far separated, under different forms of government, and under very varying circumstances, we were one Society—one in faith, one in doctrine, and united in upholding before the world the great principles and testimonies which had distinguished our portion of the church from the beginning. The number of epistles read was fifteen, embracing the whole sisterhood of yearly meetings in this country and abroad, with but a single exception. I heard no allusion made in the meeting to this missing link, but in the interim between the sessions several Friends spoke to me of the deep regret which they knew was generally felt among their members that there was not closer church relationship between the Friends of Philadelphia and Kansas. They believed the absence of it was a loss to both. They spoke with grateful appreciation of the generous kindness shown by Friends of Philadelphia to many of them in years of drought and famine, but still more helpful did they believe it would be to them to have the brotherly counsel and Christian fellowship of those of so much larger experience in the church.

THE STATE OF SOCIETY.

In considering the State of Society it was noticeable that although report was made that the queries were read and answered in subordinate meetings, as directed, no formal or detailed answers were sent up to the yearly meeting, but they were for the most part in general terms. One of the quarters, however, reported that a meeting within its limits had been several times omitted "on account of the absence of the pastor." The occasion was availed of to administer timely admonition, and to set forth the views which the Society of Friends has always maintained in regard to the conduct of meetings for divine worship; that the presence of any one in the station of a minister was not necessary for the proper holding of a meeting of Friends; that meetings should be primarily for worship, and not to hear words, and that acceptable worship could be performed in the silence of all flesh. This timely counsel was well received by the meeting, as was manifested by many expressions of unity. Notwithstanding this and other exceptions which were causes of regret, the reports showed a generally healthful and satisfactory condition, and there were many expressions of thankfulness for the goodness and mercy which had crowned the year, and for the blessings, both spiritual and temporal, which had been showered upon this portion of the church. Some one started the anthem, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," and the audience rose and joined therein with fervent heartiness. I think this was the only occasion when there was singing, excepting at the opening or closing of a session.

FRIENDS' UNIVERSITY.

One of the most interesting, as well as important, matters claiming the attention of the yearly meeting, was the report of the Board of Directors of "Friends' University, which showed an enrollment of one hundred and forty-four students, an increase of forty-two over last year." A lively interest pervaded the meeting, participated in by many of the members, as well as by several of the visitors from other yearly meetings. The directors recommended that a Twentieth Century Thank Offering for the benefit of the University should now be commenced, to close with the end of the year 1901. The recommendation was adopted, and a subscription being immediately entered upon, about $2,000 was secured. There are very few wealthy Friends in Kansas. It was most interesting and instructive to witness the earnest readiness of almost every one in the meeting to contribute according to his means, and I felt sure that many a contribution of $5 or $10 made on that occasion represented not the increment of invested funds, but the earnings of daily toil. Some may be disposed to think the title of "University" quite too pretentious. Kansas Friends, however, are not responsible for it. How they became connected with this educational enterprise may not be generally known to the readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND. The facts, as I learned them, are well worth narration. The University building was erected a dozen or more years ago by the Christian denomination, of which the late President Garfield was a member, and to commemorate his memory the founder gave to it the name of "Garfield University." It is a very substantial edifice, five stories high, the first story of stone and the upper portions of pressed brick, 245 feet front by 175 feet in depth, and said to have cost over $200,000. The founders borrowed one-half the cost ($100,000) on mortgage, but failing to realize their expectations as to getting the enterprise on its feet, and being unable to pay the interest on the mortgage, the building, with its surrounding campus of 15 acres, was sold under foreclosure for $50,000 only.

MUNIFICENT PROPOSITION.

The purchaser, a benevolent member of the yearly meeting, made to Kansas Yearly Meeting the munificent proposition that if they would assume the responsibility of establishing and maintaining the University he would convey to them the building and adjacent land, and in addition 300 city lots, all clear of incumbrance, with, however, the added conditions, viz., that no debt should be created; that none of the city lots should be sold until the expiration of five years, and that meantime the yearly meeting should raise an endowment fund of not less than $50,000.

BEAUTIFUL FOR SITUATION.

The building and campus occupy an elevated plateau about two miles from the center of Wichita, and having connection by trolley road. The location is in every way convenient and desirable. Although now known as "Friends' University," the name "Garfield University," cut in stone on the face of the building, is likely to remain there, at least until after the conditions have been fully complied with. That these generous conditions will be complied with, there should be no doubt. Indeed, I felt satisfied, from the earnest interest and enthusiasm manifested on the occasion already referred to, that there would be no failure on the part of Kansas Friends to secure this magnificent educational foundation. They will, however, have to look to their fellow members in other yearly meetings for aid to secure the endowment fund, and surely their own praiseworthy and self-denying efforts to do according to the extent of their own ability should command for them the generous recognition of those blessed with larger means.

RESPONSIBILITY INVOLVED.

Perhaps every one has not duly considered the great responsibility now devolved upon Kansas Friends, and the still greater responsibilities which, by reason of geographical and other conditions, are likely to devolve upon them in the very near future. Within the lifetime of some who are now living, the center of Quaker population of this country was in Philadelphia. In the second quarter of the century it passed rapidly westward, and reached Indiana, and the tide is still westward bound. More than half the membership of the Society of Friends in this country—indeed, if the most recent statistics are reliable, more than half the membership of the Society of Friends in the world—is to be found within the limits of the four yearly meetings—Indiana, Western, Iowa and Kansas. Indeed, the membership of the last named (Kansas) alone nearly equals in number the membership of the three ancient yearly meetings of New England, New York and Philadelphia. If any one will take his map and observe the geographical position of Kansas, and take note of the steady increase in the Quaker population of that State, as well as of Oklahoma, and even the Indian Territory, and notice especially the location of the city of Wichita, he cannot fail to be impressed with the fact that this late "garden of wilderness," if not already, is soon to become a most important center of Quaker education and influence.

THE GOLDEN GRAIN.

I was told, and have reason to think the statement correct, that the eight counties immediately surrounding Wichita produce more wheat and oats and corn than any other eight contiguous counties in the United States. The farmers of these favored counties may justly felicitate themselves upon the magnificent yield of their fertile fields. But in the same region there are fields of quite another class—some of them much neglected, but which, under proper culture, would yield even more magnificently. The moral and religious training and education of their youth to fit them for Christian citizenship would be of inestimably greater value to the State than all this wealth of golden grain.

IMMORTALITY.

What mystery is this that I behold?
Such silence and such stillness do enwrap thee
That men say death, at last, does thee enfold.
Ah, no! 'tis life, the life of vast eternity.

Now stretch thy gauzy wings and fly away,
And teach me thus the tears to brush aside
For loved ones that once walked this toilsome way, Forevermore with Him will safe abide.

"NARRAGANSETT FRIENDS' MEETING IN THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY." *

BY AMELIA MOTT GUMMERE.

Any story of Quakerism that is told with true appreciation of Quaker aims and ideals must be penned by one who approaches his task from within the pale. There are subtleties of the spirit too vague for the outsider to grasp, which yet must be present, or the tale is told in vain. The Quaker has his picturesque as well as his utilitarian side. Fiction has failed to represent him. So far, the best pictures of the early Quaker have been historical sketches in which he has described his own environment in the quaint, terse phraseology of an earlier day.

In the very interesting volume under notice, the Narragansett Quaker has received his due at the hands of a sympathetic descendant, whose heart responds to his stern convictions of duty, and whose eye sees the picturesque. The opening chapter on "Quaker Beginnings" is a good description of the early New England to which the Quakers came; and the Boston martyrs, notably Mary Dyer, receive a just tribute. President Hazard points out in a few words the feeling that all the English settlers possessed in greater or less degree—that the world was not God's, but the devil's, and that in coming to a new country inhabited by heathen, they came to the territory of Satan. They therefore made ready to combat all the powers of evil. When the Quakers arrived, not long after them, with their message of the "Light," declaring that conduct, not doctrine, was to save men's souls, such vital differences rebuked their cruel creed, and history tells the tale of woe.

Rhode Island welcomed the Friends more naturally than Massachusetts. The disaffected from all the colonies flocked to that atmosphere of religious toleration surrounding Roger Williams. It was indeed a strange community—

"A motley host, the Lord's debris, Faith's odds and ends together."

This author regrets that George Fox and Roger Williams did not meet. They must have recognized the nobility of each other's nature had Providence thrown them together. Convincingly, but in language that leaves something to be desired, she says: "There must always be the two orders of men—the intuitive seer and the logical reasoner. Both these men have their noble share of the world's work, and in the case of Fox and Williams, both made a distinct contribution to the spiritual life of mankind—Fox with his devout and keen perception of divine immanence in the indwelling spirit, and Williams with his new doctrine of the freedom of man's conscience from "inforcements." These two should certainly have found points of contact in an age which is the fruit of both their teachings."

How welcome to Fox must have been his appreciation in the new colony, after his stripes and bonds in the mother country! His visit, which extended to the south, settled and established meetings in Rhode Island, and occurred in the spring and summer of 1672. The colony was but three years old when the first Quakers came to it, in 1658, from Burlington, in Yorkshire, in the "Woodhouse," Robert Fowler, Master. In passing, it may be noted that the same town sent the first shipload of Quakers that settled on the shores of the Upper Delaware, five years later. It was not, however, until 1699 that Rhode Island Quarterly Meeting was established, including the Monthly Meetings of Rhode Island, Dartmouth and Narragansett; and there are no records of Friends' meetings on the west side of the Bay until 1702, when Greenwich was established, which included Narragansett. This delay was caused by the rival claims of both Connecticut and Rhode Island to the land, and the controversies of two opposing companies of purchasers, both of which contained men active in Quaker persecution. Narragansett was at first called Kingstown, soon changed to Greenwich; it included all Friends from Narragansett to Providence.

The picture of the homely, everyday life among these conscientious people; their care over the bodies as well as the souls of their members; their hard life in the bleak New England winter, when going to meeting became almost an act of heroism; their travels even to distant London with the gospel message, and the welcome given the stranger from that headquarters of Quakerism—all this is pictured in the quaint records which are so graphically set forth. Friends had to struggle with "fanatics, ranters, deists and infidels," comprehensively described as "Newlites" in the early minutes. Several members were dealt with for pulling off the hat in time of prayer in the congregation of these "Newlites." The censure was probably for their recognition of the discountenanced sect, and not, as Caroline Hazard evidently thinks, for the removal of the hat itself; an act of worship in time of prayer recommended by Fox, and practiced by all early Friends. The hat was at once replaced when the prayer ended, and its removal was a tribute to the orthodoxy of the suppliant. Its removal, therefore, in a "Newlight" meeting was a grave offence.

Attention is drawn to the respect given women in the meetings of these Friends, although it is an error to say that George Fox set up separate business meetings for women. In point of fact, they did not exist until established in London in 1753. The women's meeting receives an unique tribute to its efficiency in the minute which Thomas Hazard drew up in 1771, in reply to certain "lines" received from Nine Partners' Monthly Meeting, intimating that it was not their practice to receive women Friends unless their certificate was signed by the clerk of the men's meeting as well. The South Kingstown men gallantly reply:

"Therefore in Condesention to our friends of the Monthly meeting at Nine partners we do hereby direct the Clerk of this meeting to signifie to sd monthly meeting that we have neither precedent nor Discipline amongst us for such a practice, neither do we think it Convnant (convenient) So far to Degrade our women's meeting. But to Let them have the use and exercise of our Discipline as occasion may call for it in Conducting the affairs of their meeting not Desiring the Preheminance when Truth admits of none But believing that both male and female are all one in Christ Jesus. Every book which sets forth a vivid picture of the noble work accomplished in the world by Friends should be warmly welcomed. The day is rapidly approaching when lines are to be less clearly drawn between the sects, and the work of George Fox and his were slaveholders, and the chapter on slavery is an interesting summary of the views held by most Friends on the subject. The visits of John Woolman, in 1740, and again in 1760, were fruitful in results. The first recorded testimony against slavery was that of Richard Smith, who presented a paper (given in full in the appendix), dated 28th 11th mo., 1757, stating his reasons for the manumission of a slave girl. The year 1786 saw the last slave freed, two years after the Emancipation Act passed by the Rhode Island legislature, although the meeting had long before declared itself as a body clear from "the detestable practice of enslaving mankind."

The final chapter on the Revolution shows similar experiences to those of other meetings in such trying times. The meeting house at South Kingston was occupied as a hospital. The "the good order of Friends" was, however, strictly observed, and by the end of the eighteenth century the meeting was settled;" "they had the tradition of piety and right living behind them; they knew the truth, which had made them free. Here was an organized representative government, equipped for work, and with the vital spark of life."

One thorn of experience is worth a whole wilderness of warning.—Louree.

When I consider what some books have done for the world, and what they are doing; how they keep up our hope, awaken new courage and faith, soothe pain, give an ideal life to those whose hours are cold and hard, bind together distant ages and foreign lands, create new worlds of beauty, bring down truth from heaven, I give eternal blessings for this gift, and thank God for books.—J. F. Clarke.

THE QUAKERS IN PENNSYLVANIA.*

THERE has been in recent years an increasing interest in the contribution which the Quaker made to the development of our history and our system of constitutional government. The real William Penn has been re-discovered, and we are beginning to get back, by the historical method, into the life and atmosphere of the times of the holy experiment. Isaac Sharpless's two volumes on Quaker Government have been valuable contributions to the study of this subject, and nobody who cares for the facts can afford to leave these two books unread.

The second volume, which has been recently issued, deals with the position and work and sufferings of Friends during the critical years of the Revolution. No people could well have been put in a harder strait than were these Pennsylvania Friends, with their conservative attitude toward existing government and their conscientious opposition to war. The inner history of these years, built out of contemporary records and first-hand matter, is not only valuable for all future historical work, but it is intensely interesting as a piece of history and human struggle under difficult situations. Some of the chapters appeared originally in THE AMERICAN FRIEND, and we heartily commend the whole of the book to our readers.

John Fiske needs no introduction as a writer of American colonial history; his successive volumes on the life and history of the colonies have been eagerly welcomed, and stand among the best historical works in our rich American literature in this department. His study of Quakerism and the Quaker movement in these present volumes is sympathetic and appreciative, and one could hardly wish for a more interesting story of the practical working out of the Quaker idea of society and government than is here given.

"Quakerism," he says, "was the most extreme form which Protestantism had assumed. In so far as Protestantism claimed to be working a reformation in Christianity by retaining the spiritual core and dropping off the non-essential integuments, the Quakers carried this process about as far as it could go."

Speaking of George Fox's principle, he says, "The basis of his teaching was the belief that each soul is in religious matters answerable not to its fellows, but to God alone, without priestly meditation, because the Holy Spirit is immediately present in every soul, and is thus a direct source of illumination." Then he proceeds to show what practical consequences flowed from this central belief. He concludes rightly that the Quakers "believed it their business to reform the whole of Christendom, not to gather themselves into some quiet corner where they might worship unmolested. They were inspired by an aggressive missionary zeal which was apt to lead them where their company was not wanted." They came not to minister unto sound Rhode Island, but unto sick Massachusetts. The Puritan theocracy was their man of sin."

He is again undoubtedly right when he says that it was largely due to the preaching of William Penn—a man of high social position and gallant bearing—that public opinion gradually ceased to confound the disciples of Fox with the rabble of fanatics which abounded at the time. The story of Penn's early life is admirably told. After a delightful account of Penn's memorable visit on the continent in company with Fox, Barclay and Keith, he says, "It was a renewal of Christ's teaching that religion is an affair of the inner soul, and not of externals; and there can be little doubt that the Christian ideal has been, on the whole, more perfectly realized among the Quakers than with any other sect of Christians."

The story of the colonization of New Jersey and Pennsylvania, and the attempt to realize the Quaker ideal in a practical society and state, are capitally told.

PROPOSED UNION OF FRIENDS' ACADEMIES OF KANSAS YEARLY MEETING WITH FRIENDS' UNIVERSITY.

While the late yearly meeting was in session at Wichita, a meeting was called of the members of the several boards of trustees or managers of academies to consider their relation to the University.

A committee was appointed to draft plans for bringing about the establishment of a proper system of education in the yearly meeting, and for co-ordinating the schools of different grades.

This committee presented such plans to an adjourned meeting of the academy boards, which, after considering them, agreed to invite the board of directors and the faculty of the University to meet with them in joint session to consider this important subject.

At this meeting the plans thus far considered were read, and to some extent discussed. While nearly all vocal expression was in approval of the suggestions offered, it was thought best to have the whole subject referred to a committee selected from the academy boards, the board of directors and the faculty of the University, to consider and formulate plans for accomplishing the desired purpose, and bring them forward for consideration at next yearly meeting.

The following constitute the committee: William B. Morgan, chairman, Lowell, Kansas; Prof. J. Edwin Jay, secretary, Wichita; President Edmund Stanley, Wichita; John G. Kirby, Wichita; John Howard, yearly meeting superintendent of education, Wichita; Margaret H. Miles, Lawrence, Kansas; Dillon H. Dillon, North Branch; Charles C. Brown, Tonganoxie; Josiah Binford, Haviland; David L. Davis, Hesper; David A. Curl, Washington; Frank Veach, Kiowa, Kansas (Stella); James M. Davis, 21 Washington Place, New York City, N. Y.

The names of the members of this committee are published that all persons interested in this important subject may be free to communicate with them.

The suggestions of the first committee mentioned, detailing plans for a basis of union, are herewith appended for the consideration of the members of Kansas Yearly Meeting. It will be observed that they have been formulated on the assumption that the academies should become component parts of the University as much as the present preparatory department of the university is a part.

1. Each of the academies must first be freed from debt.

2. The titles to their real estate shall then be turned over to Kansas Yearly Meeting when the yearly meeting shall have acquired title to the University property at Wichita.

3. Each local academy board shall nominate one of its members, who, with the approval of the yearly meeting, shall become a member of the Board of Directors of the University.

4. These, with the other members appointed by the yearly meeting, shall constitute the Board of Directors of the University.

5. This Board of Directors shall have under their charge not only the appointment of the teaching force at the University, but also the principals of the academies entering into this compact, and the academies shall become component parts of the University, and the principals, consequently, members of the University faculty. We suggest that names like the following be adopted: Friends' University Preparatory, at _____, etc.

6. To make this bond of union vital the $50,000 necessary to be raised, in order to secure the titles of the property at Wichita, with as much more as can be secured for this fund, shall be used for an endowment fund, whose income shall be applied towards paying the salaries of the University professors of faculty, thus enabling all these institutions to lower the prices of tuition.

7. The students of the academies shall be enrolled in the University catalogue as students of the University.

8. The University faculty shall arrange the courses of study for this educational system, and the examination and gradation of the pupils shall be uniform throughout the system.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[A copy of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, containing the article on George Adam Smith at Northfield, by J. Walter Malone, was sent by one of our readers to George Adam Smith. He has sent a letter in reply, requesting that it be printed.—ED.]

Free Church College,
Lynedoch Street, Glasgow.
October 26th, 1899.

The article is a tissue of misstatement, both with regard to my own opinions and the facts of my invitation to Northfield.

To take the latter point—the invitation to me to Northfield was not given long ago, as the writer says, before my opinions were known, but by Mr. Moody himself while I was delivering the Yale lectures last April. I pointed out to him that my views did not coincide with his own on inspiration. But he pressed his invitation, and I went to Northfield, preached at his request, gave the commencement address at Mount Hermon School, and addressed the prayer meeting at the Northfield School. Mr. Moody was most kind to me. All my intercourse with that great and good man was a powerful inspiration.

As to my opinions, the writer of the article has given a totally false account. I take his statements one by one and deny them. They are all false. I do not deny inspiration to the prophets. I do not deny direct revelation from God through Israel to the world. My Yale lectures were delivered mainly for the purpose of proving that there was such a revelation.

Again, I have always pointed out how Jesus Christ fulfilled prophecy. I have never said, nor do I believe, that he "bore false testimony to the origin and infallibility of the scriptures." Again, the statement of the writer that according to my teaching "there was no supernatural Christ to be our Saviour" is absolutely false. He cannot have read anything I have written, or he would know that my belief in a real revelation of God in the Old Testament, and in Jesus Christ as the Son of God and Saviour of men is firm and clear.

Further, the "sample" of my lectures which the writer professes to give in my words is not by me. I never wrote or spoke those words, and they entirely misrepresent my teaching.

The article is so glaringly false that it will not mislead anyone who has heard even only a little of my opinions. But there are others who have had no occasion to hear me or read what I have written, and who may be misled by the article. Will you, therefore, do me the favor to have this letter inserted in answer to this attack of which I have been made the object?

Let me repeat—my whole interest in the Old Testament springs from the belief that we have in it a real revelation from God to men through Israel, and all the recent labors I have been busy with have had the proof of this as their end.

Of my faith in the incarnation and atoning death of our Lord Jesus Christ, I require, I hope, to make no assertion.

Yours, sincerely,

(Signed) GEORGE ADAM SMITH.

First-day, Twelfth mo. 10.—Ready to distribute. 1 Tim. 6: 6-19.

Nothing is known in regard to the author of the short book known as Malachi. From the earliest times of which there is record, it has been thought by some to be an anonymous work. From the time of John Calvin the great majority of students have adopted this view. The word Malachi is nowhere else used as a proper name. It is thought to have been borrowed from chapter 3: 1, “Behold, I send my messenger before my face,” as the Hebrew word there translated “my messenger” is “Malachi.”

The exact date of the book is uncertain, though from the allusions and references in it, it can be placed without doubt after the return from exile, and after the rebuilding of the temple (1: 10). The reference to the “governor” (1: 8) indicates Persian rule, but not that of Nehemiah, because he tells us he would not accept gifts (Neh. 5: 14-18). The practice of marrying the heathen women is strongly spoken against (2: 10-16), and he complains that the tithes have not been paid (3: 7-12). It is exactly against these things that Ezra and Nehemiah speak, the former in 458 B.C., and the latter 445 and 433 B.C. It is therefore altogether probable that the prophecy was spoken just before 458, just before 445, or soon after Nehemiah's last visit. It is not possible to decide which of these periods best fits in with the conditions, but possibly it is the period just before 445.

Though Malachi is placed at the end of the Old Testament, it is probable that Joel was of a later date, and possibly the last six chapters of Zechariah and the book of Jonah.

The style of the book is prosaic, and quite different from that of Isaiah, Jeremiah and other earlier prophets. It is more argumentative, and partakes more of the nature of teaching. While there is a genuine prophetic spirit in the words, there is but little of “the poetic and rhetorical passion which throbs through the pages of the great prophets.”

The prophet calls his people to religious and moral earnestness, and lays great stress on the right observance of the rites and ceremonies, though he is careful to point out that these are “helpful only as they secure spiritual service.”

The prophecy opens with the statement of the great fact of the love of God for his people. This the prophet enforces by comparing the condition of the two nations, Edom and Israel—the one the descendants of Esau, the other of Jacob. The terrible overthrow which had recently come upon Edom made the comparison telling, and one which the Jews long remembered. Compare 1: 3, 4 with Romans 9: 13. The lesson is now brought home to his people.

6. The argument is, if God is their father, why do they not treat him as such? “Priests.” The very ones who should set a good example are the chief offenders. A question is asked only for the purpose of being answered by the prophet himself.

7. “Polluted.” The bread they could not use themselves, they offer to the Lord; thus taking from the offering all the essence of sacrifice.

8. “Blind . . . lame . . . sick.” Animals which could not be used, they offer upon the altar, when the law said that offerings should be “without blemish,”—the best of the flock. “Governor.” They offer to the Lord what they would not dare to offer to the Persian governor.

9. As you would take a perfect offering to the governor, so you take to God the polluted bread, the lame and sick animals. Can you expect that He will regard your prayers?

10. “Oh, that there were one among you that would shut the doors, that ye might not kindle fire on mine altar in vain.” Revised Version. It were better to have the temple closed and no worship than to have a false and hypocritical one.

11. “For from the rising of the sun even unto the going down of the same my name is great among the Gentiles; and in every place incense is offered unto my name, and a pure offering: for my name is great among the Gentiles, saith the Lord of Hosts.” Revised Version. This translation, undoubtedly correct, differs from the Authorized Version in one particular; the verbs are singular, and represent the state of affairs when the prophet spoke, not what they were to be in the future. The whole context shows this to be what the prophet meant. It is well known that upon this passage, as wrongly translated, the Roman Catholics and the Ritualists rest their so-called Biblical authority for the use of incense; but as the simple statement of a fact it carries with it no authority for the practice. This passage also contains one of the most remarkable passages in the Old Testament, for it is an “emphatic acknowledgment that the one true God had those who served Him in spirit and in truth all over the world.” Compare Acts 10: 35; 17: 23, 26-29.

3: 8. “Rob God.” The prophet again, by question and answer, makes his point clear. “Tithes.” The tenth part of the increase of their property. “Offerings.” A general term including all the offerings which they were, by the law, required to make.

9. “Cursed with a curse.” This was because of their robbing God, as already described. Compare verse 11 and Deuteronomy 28. They were suffering from drought and from locusts. The neglect to pay tithes really sprung from unbelief in God; the paying the tithes would be the outward sign of a change of belief.

10. “Bring ye the whole tithe.” Revised Version. “Storehouse.” The rooms near the temple, built for the purpose. "Prove me." Try me, put me to the test. "Open the windows." A poetical expression to show the fulness of the blessing which would follow a genuine return to the Lord."

11. A promise that the locust will be driven away, and that the fruit will ripen in season.

12. "Blessed." Better, "happy."

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. The "tithe" is an Old Testament institution. While many find it helpful to give at least a tenth of their income to the Lord's work, it should not be thought that the New Testament either requires a tithe or any fixed proportion of one's income or increase. What the New Testament does teach is that all the property of each individual should be held as belonging to the Lord, and that such part of it should be freely given as He seems to require.

2. 2 Corinthians 9: 7.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR TWELFTH MONTH TENTH.

THE INDWELLING PRESENCE.

Col. 1: 21-29; Gal. 2: 20.

Second-day, Twelfth mo. 4.—My Spirit within you. Ezek. 36: 25-31.
Third-day, Twelfth mo. 5.—I will dwell in them. 2 Cor. 6: 14-18.
Fourth-day, Twelfth mo. 6.—Shall be in you. John 14: 15-17.
Fifth-day, Twelfth mo. 7.—And I in you. John 15: 1-5.
Sixth-day, Twelfth mo. 8.—I in them, thou in me. John 17: 20-26.
Seventh-day, Twelfth mo. 9.—If Christ be in you. Rom. 8: 1-11.

A "mystery" in the New Testament sense is a thing which can only be known by revelation. Hence the gospel and the new basis of fellowship between Jew and Gentile provided by the gospel were mysteries. But the richest of all the revealed mysteries was that concerning the indwelling of Christ—"Christ in you the hope of glory."

"I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me," may be taken as the highest form of personal testimony ever written. The "I" life does not surrender easily to the supremacy of Jesus Christ. We are often more willing to receive his blessings than we are to receive Him. A blessing is something tangible, recognizable by our senses; we can measure it with our little measures, stretch out tape line out over it, and give its dimensions. But the spiritual senses are too dull to appreciate the presence of the Giver himself. It is still true that "there standeth one among you whom ye know not." We are like Philip, who wanted Jesus to show him the Father; who wanted some spectacular demonstration that his outward senses could take in, and yet all the time the revelation of the Father was to be seen in Jesus Christ, and he knew it not.

Our spiritual senses can never become acute until we can say, "Yet not I." The "I" life of the natural man is carnal and deadens spiritual faculties, hardens out the Christ life, and asserts full sway in the inner life. So we can never know the reality of "Christ liveth in me" until the "I" life is crucified. It is not difficult in these days of enlightened thought to accept the truth of the Divine immanence as a Christian philosophy of life, which explains the mystery of the universe, but the statement, "Christ liveth in me," goes deeper than that. It is not mere intellectual apprehension of a satisfactory philosophy of life; it is profoundest heart harmony with that Presence. It is the accord of the moral and spiritual nature of man with Christ. It is the creation and development of a spiritual consciousness that is always sensitive to that Presence; it is a life that "draws its breath" in the fear of the Lord." (See margin of Isaiah 11: 2; also Hebrew text.)

Christ lives in us as the keeper of our lives. "Greater is he that is in you than he that is in the world." Then the realization of His presence brings to us the sense of rest, and the casting out of fear that is the torment of many lives. The shepherd psalmist cries out, "I will fear no evil, for thou art with me." How restful is this sense of the Divine indwelling.

Christ lives in us in the constant spiritual communion of our lives. "He that eateth me shall live by me." No outward bread and wine partaken once a week or once a month can be substituted for this blessed, constant impartation of the Christ life to us. Christ lives in us as the power of constant renewal and inspiration. Human nature, like a watch, runs down. Our bodies waste away daily, and are only renewed by food. Our spiritual life is not self-existent. Our energies flag; our inspirations evaporate; Christ within sustains courage, faith, love and hope. Christ's life in us is a perpetual power of transformation. Though the elimination of sin be ever so instantaneous, the transformation of character into the image of Jesus Christ is a gradual process. It is "from glory to glory." The glory of yesterday soon fades unless with open face we still behold the glory of our Lord. The making over of our selfish, impulsive, wilful, self-centered lives into the likeness of Jesus Christ transcends all creations of planets, suns and systems of worlds. They are the work of God's fingers; this is the passion of His heart. In the heavens He set a tabernacle for the sun, but in us He builds a tabernacle for himself.

Do not cheat thy heart and tell her,
"Grief will pass away;
Hope for fairer things to-morrow,
And forget to-day."
Tell her, if you will, that sorrow
Need not come in vain;
Tell her that the lesson taught her
Far outweighs the pain.

BALTIMORE YEARLY MEETING.

The Meeting on Ministry and Oversight met at 10 a.m., Eleventh month 10th. The spirit of prayer at once pervaded the meeting, and as one after another knelt in supplication, our hearts went out in unison with the petitions. "Let our meetings be begun, continued and concluded in the presence and power of God." "Bless us and make us a blessing." "Give us ready and attentive minds." "Prepare, humble, search and cleanse us."

Throughout the deep and spirited exercise of this meeting our attention was directed not to ourselves, our work, our responsibility or our consecration, but to God Himself—His presence, His power, His watchful care, His co-operation, His gifts, His calls and His service. A few of the salient points made by Friends who spoke to the business of the meeting were: "We must allow each other freedom." "Our responsibility is mutual, and extends not only to members of our own meeting, but to the neighborhood in which the meeting is located." "Congregations are largely responsible for the character of the ministry." "It is a tremendous responsibility to hold the truths committed to our society. Too many of us are like fruit jars, used for the preservation of truth, when we should have been promulgating truth."

We were admonished to be careful not to attempt to define too closely the fundamental doctrines. "If we uphold Christ we are upholding truth—truth springeth from the ground—truth is alive." "Our younger people need to be taught why we hold truths that seem to be out of harmony with other denominations. Our attitude should be aggressive and enthusiastic, not apologetic."

"Friends have accomplished the development of the strongest type of Christian character. A people taught to depend solely upon God is a people made able to withstand the strongest attacks, no matter from whom nor from whence they may come." A cordial welcome was extended to the visiting ministers.

The regular business session of the yearly meeting began at 3 p.m. with prayer by David E. Sampson. Anna B. Thomas and Abram Fisher spoke briefly, and Elizabeth Tatum and Anna D. Stabler offered prayer.

Minutes were read for James R. Jones, N. C.; David E. Sampson, N. C.; John M. Watson, Kansas; Edgar L. Requa, N. Y.; Caleb Jenkins, N. Y.; J. Robert Parker, N. C.; Sarah W. Newlin, N. E., and Abram Fisher, an elder from N. C.

The report of the Miles White Beneficial Society was read. About $5,000 have been expended in aiding worthy individuals, assisting charitable institutions and for educational purposes.

An interesting statistical report was read. Our total membership is 1,212, nearly half of whom are males. Special interest attends this statement, as other denominations report their membership to be about 33 per cent. males.

Epistles were read from London, Dublin and Canada.

SEVENTH DAY.

The meeting gathered, as had been previously decided, in joint session. Prayer was offered by John M. Watson and David E. Sampson spoke of the importance of church business, our dependence upon the leading of the Spirit, and the need of spirit-filled men and women in all the official positions of the church.

The first three queries were read, with their answers, and an interesting discussion followed, in which our members and our visiting Friends took an active part. Much stress was laid upon attendance at our mid-week meetings. "We should train our children to believe that the prime object of life is to glorify God." "What we most desire for our children is what we get." Let us be careful that we desire the best things for them. "Our love towards one another represents our Christian life." "Women in their homes and men in their business have an opportunity to manifest a religious concern for those under their care which may be a telling example for the Lord."

Minutes read for Willis R. Hotchkiss and Arthur B. Chilson, Ohio.

At night a largely attended meeting listened to "The Story of the Canteen," told by Dr. Dunn, of New York.

FIRST DAY.

Bible schools were conducted at Eutaw Street and at Light Street. Largely attended meetings were held at both places. Also an overflow meeting at Eutaw Street.

Our visiting Friends and others were engaged in the ministry, but space forbids a report of inspiring sermons, to which we listened.

Meetings were held at the same places at 8 p.m.

At 3.30 p.m. a Christian Endeavor meeting was held at Eutaw Street. Officers were elected for the ensuing year. A number spoke on the topic of the day, and Micajah M. Binford spoke for fifteen minutes on "I am debtor—obligation; I am ready—consecration; I am not ashamed—courage."

SECOND DAY MORNING.

Prayer was offered by David E. Sampson and Rufus King. Anna D. Stabler, Micajah M. Binford and Rufus King spoke.

Minutes were read for Joseph James Neave, of England; Rufus P. King, N. C., and Micajah M. Binford, N. Y.

Many who were present testified to the blessing attending a former visit of J. J. Neave thirty-five years ago.

The fourth, fifth and sixth queries and their answers were read. The meeting was brought into deep and searching exercise.

"There is more at stake in maintaining a testimony to a free gospel ministry than we are accustomed to suppose. That we have had such ministry as that of Joseph John Gurney, Stephen Grellet and others of their stamp, is due to the fact that they belonged to a church in which the door was kept open. Their power was largely due to the fact that they were men—cultured men, men of business, men among men."

"The principles of the society of Friends are necessary to the nineteenth century. We have a message for this century for which we are individually responsible, and if we do not speak it, it will be given to someone else." "We must draw people to us on our own lines, mere methods will fail."

The subject of the use of intoxicants, tobacco, and the growing of tobacco gave rise to a serious concern, and at a later session a minute was adopted directing an inquiry into the use of liquor by our members, and advising monthly meetings to caution their members on the use of tobacco.

SECOND DAY AFTERNOON.

A minute was read for Benjamin F. Trueblood, Boston.

Epistles were read from New England, New York, North Carolina and the London general epistle.

The report of the Home Mission Committee showed activity in boys' clubs, girls' clubs, mothers' meetings, sewing schools, union Bible classes, visits to jails and penitentiaries, work among colored people, mission services, distribution of literature and visiting and relieving the sick and poor.

David E. Sampson presented the needs of the Blue Ridge Mission and Augusta Academy, in Davie County, N. C.

The Pastoral and Evangelistic Committee reported eighteen series of meetings.

Eli G. Parker and wife visited a number of country meetings and families.

Its members have been actively engaged in visiting the various meetings, but owing to the severity of the winter, the number of visits is not quite as large as in previous years. One meeting reported a series of pleasant Sabbath evenings, and another meeting a number of visits paid to colored missions.

At night Benjamin F. Trueblood gave a most interesting address on the recent conference at The Hague.

THIRD DAY.

Micajah M. Binford, Catherine Shipley and David E. Sampson were engaged in the ministry. Benjamin Trueblood offered prayer. This session was largely devoted to the subject of foreign missions. The Foreign Mission Committee reported that they had collected and distributed the sum of $1,210.60, chiefly in mission work in Mexico, Japan and Palestine.

After the reading of the report opportunity was given to M. M. Binford to present the subject of the Ecumenical Conference, to be held in New York; to Benjamin F. Trueblood to explain the open door for service in Cuba, and to Willis R. Hotchkiss to present the needs of the African Industrial Mission. Our hearts burned within us as we listened to the thrilling words of these Friends.

The yearly meeting encouraged the committee to co-operate with other yearly meetings in the work in Cuba, so far as the funds received by them shall permit. They were requested to take the matter of the proposed East African mission into serious consideration and report upon it next year.

The subject of judicial oaths engaged the serious attention of the meeting. We feel that we have an important testimony to bear, not only to the speaking of truth in judicial presence, but at all times. We are always in the presence of God, and while we rejoice that the form of the judicial oath has been so improved in Maryland, we trust that Friends will have upon their minds the coming of a time when a man shall be asked to testify truthfully because he is a man—God's man.

We have referred the question as to whether Friends may use the present improved form of oath to a committee, to report next year.

A greeting was read from our aged friend, Joseph Stanley.

Epistles were read from Western, Iowa and Kansas.

At night a devotional meeting was held, and the Pastoral Committee met.

FOURTH DAY.

Prayer by John M. Watson.

The Bible School Committee reported twenty-two Bible schools, with an enrollment of 564 children and 468 adults.

The Educational Committee reported that in addition to aiding individuals desiring college training and various monthly meeting schools, they have continued their practice of extending the length of the public school term in localities where there are no schools under our care.

Mary Mendenhall Hobbs presented the need of an additional cottage for girls attending Guilford College. The yearly meeting commended the cause to the liberality of our members.

The Committee on Temperance and Suppression of Liquor Traffic reported its members and others actively engaged in this work. At their request our representative meeting was asked to send a protest to President McKinley against the nullification of the Canteen Law.

The treasurer's report was read and approved.

FOURTH DAY AFTERNOON.

Epistles were read from Indiana, California, Wilmington and Ohio.

The minutes of the representative meeting were read. An interesting item was the mention of a bequest of $3,000 from a person not a Friend for educational purposes.

Our Indian Committee, in their report, mention their appreciation of the continued active co-operation of Baltimore Monthly Meeting's Committee on Indian Missions, in support of their mission for Iowa Indians.

The Committee on Peace reported more general interest in the subject. A large and enthusiastic mass meeting was held in Baltimore last winter, to which this committee extended valued aid.

The needs of the Dukhobors were presented, and the cause commended to the liberality of our members.

FIFTH DAY.

A public meeting for worship was held at 10 a.m. Joseph J. Neave, Edgar L. Requa, Willis R. Hotchkiss, Mills E. Raiford, Clarissa F. Davis, Richard H. Thomas, Anna D. Stabler, Caleb Jenkins, J. Robert Parker, Abram Fisher and M. M. Hobbs were engaged in the ministry. Prayer was offered by David E. Sampson and by several in the body of the meeting.

We praise God for answer to our prayers, for His messengers and for His message—a message of enlargement, development and enrichment.

The Committee on Correspondence presented drafts of epistles to be sent to the various yearly meetings, also one to our absent members, and one to the children.

BIRTH.

MOSEFIELD.—To C. E. and Rosa A. Mosefield, of Alva, Oklahoma, a son, Eleventh month 12th, 1899.

MARRIED.

REES—STROMBERG.—At the home of the bride, Providence, R. I., Eleventh month, 9th, 1899, Seth C. Rees to Frida Marie Stromberg.

News from the Field.

Nathan and Esther Frame have been holding a series of meetings in the State of Maine, and have just finished a successful meeting in the city of Portland.

Amelia M. Gummere has a very valuable and interesting historical article on "Oxford and the Quakers" in the "Pennsylvania Magazine of History and Biography" for Tenth month. The article has been reprinted and published in an attractive pamphlet form.

Benjamin F. Trueblood, of Boston, has a strong and able contribution in the November "Coming Age" on the "Outlook for Peace." In it he says: "The hopefulness of the situation is so great, the goal, though far away, is so plainly in sight, as to inspire every friend of peace with the utmost faith and courage to pursue his task in season and out of season."

John W. Graham, of Manchester, read an address at the Birmingham Summer School on "Isaac Pennington." It has since been published in pamphlet form. It is an admirable address, and we have read it with unusual interest and profit.

Our Friend, Caroline Stephen, author of "Quaker Strongholds," has a helpful article in the current number of the "Friends' Quarterly Examiner" on "Meeting or Church?" It is a thoughtful consideration of the spiritual advantages of being a member of the Society of Friends.

Richard Westlake, who has for many years been editor of the "Friends' Quarterly Examiner," has closed his valuable editorial service with the present issue.

We print this week in another column an interesting plan which Kansas Friends have developed for uniting and co-ordinating their educational work.

A Friend in Ohio writes: "I greatly appreciate the editorials in THE AMERICAN FRIEND. There has been such a depth and breadth, a manifestation of indwelling life and the Spirit of God, that they have been a great comfort to me."

Gurney Binford and wife, after a fairly smooth voyage, safely arrived at Yokohama on the 24th of Tenth month, and were well, and expect soon to be at their post of work in Mito, Japan.

It is proposed to form a new quarterly meeting out of Iowa and Shawnee Monthly Meetings in Oklahoma, to be known as Shawnee Quarterly Meeting.

SLUGGISH INTELLECT

Caused By Coffee.

"Careful inquiry in the school-room developed the fact that those children who are habitually given coffee to drink have sallow complexion, are nervous, more or less irritable and very sluggish intellect or an overwrought and abnormal imagination, results of extreme nervousness. My own experience with coffee drinking kept me afflicted for some years with severe and constant headaches, with extreme nervousness at times.

"I was compelled to abandon coffee altogether and was quickly relieved of the headaches and other troubles. I was fortunate enough to secure a package of Postum Food Coffee, but my first attempt at making it was a failure. After another trial and following directions (which are very easy, by the way) I secured a delicious drink, far superior in my mind to Coffee. I have continued to use it from the start and my improvement has been steady with no ill affects at all."

The above was written by a school teacher, Miss E. Barnard, of Oxford, Kan.

It is an easy matter to leave off the coffee habit, if Postum Cereal Food Coffee is used in its place, particularly when attention is given to its proper preparation. The whole secret of the preparation is in allowing the Food Coffee to boil long enough to bring out the taste and food value.

All first-class grocers sell Postum.

NEW YORK YEARLY MEETING.

Meetings will be held at Friends' Meeting House, 144 East Twentieth Street, New York city, Twelfth month 4th-6th, 1899.

Second Day, Twelfth month 4th.—4.30 p.m., trustees and committee of H. H. Mosher Fund; 7.30 p.m., Bible School Board, semi-annual meeting; 7.30 p.m., Christian Endeavor of Yearly Meeting, Executive Committee.

Third Day, Twelfth month 5th.—10.00 a.m., representative meeting; 12.30 p.m., lunch; immediately after lunch, Evangelistic Committee.

Public Meeting.—3.00 p.m., addresses by J. Wilbur Chapman, Robert E. Speer; 6.30 p.m., supper; 7.30 p.m., address by Rufus M. Jones, subject, "The Attitude of Modern Christians Toward the Bible."

Fourth Day, Twelfth month 6th.—9.00 a.m., Temperance Committee; 9.30 a.m., Conference of Ministers and Christian Workers, conducted by Mary S. Knowles; 10.30 a.m., address by M. M. Binford, subject, "The Four Gospels: Our Work for 1900"; 3.30 p.m., Woman's Foreign Missionary Society; 4.00 p.m., Mexican Committee of Board of Home and Foreign Missions; 4.30 p.m., High Point Committee of Board of Home and Foreign Missions; 5 p.m., Board of Home and Foreign Missions; 6.30 p.m., supper; 7.30 p.m., New York Monthly Meeting.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING.

Alda, Nebraska.—Platte Valley Quarterly Meeting of Friends was held at Alda, Hall County, Nebraska, Eleventh month 17th to 19th. About thirty delegates were present from a distance, thirteen of the number driving nearly sixty miles. No ministers were in attendance from out side the quarterly meeting, but the gospel was preached with power, and God's truth came to many hearts more clearly and definitely than ever before. Under the ministry of Elwood Knight, Turner Abel and Herbert J. Mott. Those in attendance received a spiritual uplift, and many saw more clearly the responsibilities and privileges in the Christian life. To God be all the praise.

At the business meeting, held Seventh-day afternoon, a Home Mission or Church Extension Board was appointed, with a thought of so organizing and systematizing our efforts that we shall be more efficient in God's hands in occupying the fields that are "white, indeed, unto harvest." From many quarters comes the request that Friends should organize new meetings and preach the gospel in its fulness. "The harvest is plenteous, but the laborers are few; pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest, that he send forth laborers unto his harvest."

H. M. J.

OHIO YEARLY MEETING.

Adrian Quarterly Meeting was held at Tecumseh, Mich., Eleventh month 4th to 5th, 1899. On Sixth-day, Eleventh month 3d, there was a steady, hard rain, so that only a few were able to get to the Meeting of Ministry and Oversight. On Seventh- and First-days J. Walter Malone was present, accompanied by Charles H. Babcock, a member of Cornwall Monthly Meeting, New York, but at present a student at the Training School at Cleveland; also Lauretta Pim, of Damascus, Ohio. Belle Harrington, who has recently come to reside as pastor at Raisin Valley, was also present. These all participated in the services both days.

On First-day afternoon J. Walter Malone gave an address on Bible study. In the business meeting G. F. Westgate obtained an endorsement of minute for gospel service in the limits of Iowa and Kansas Yearly Meetings, and F. L. Ryon for service in New York and Indiana Yearly Meetings.

Encouragement was given and an appropriation made to defray cost of printing and postage, etc., for the semi-centennial of Raisin Valley Seminary on Sixth month 22d, 1900.

MARY C. WOOD.

London, Canada.—Evangelists N. C. and C. E. McLean have closed their interesting series of union meetings that have been in progress for four weeks past, which resulted in the conversion of sinners to Christ and the consecration of believers for the baptism with the Holy Ghost. Many persons have greatly enjoyed the word preached, and the singing of the beautiful hymns by these evangelists.

OREGON YEARLY MEETING.

In conjunction with the Eleventh month Quarterly Meeting at Newberg, a conference for workers was held by appointment of the Representative Meeting.

Several Friends from Salem Quarterly Meeting were in attendance, including John Henry Douglas, Louisa P. Round, and Charles Baldwin, Yearly Meeting Evangelistic Superintendent. Our friends, Nathan Pickett and wife, of Kokomo, Ind., were also present very acceptably.

The Meeting of Ministry and Oversight was one of special interest and helpfulness. A. R. Mills introduced the subject of the recording of ministers, which led to serious consideration as to the fitness of candidates for the ministry, the importance of the call, and the methods of recording in various yearly meetings.

During the conference the following subjects were presented, and some of them discussed: "Church Finance—The Best Plan," was presented in a persuasive and practical way by J. Jay Cook, of Marion. President Thomas Newlin read a striking paper on "The Social Life of the Church." It was a scholarly utterance, thoroughly in harmony with the latest pronouncements on the subject, truly spiritual, and revealing finely some social aspects of the Quaker faith. "The Anti-Saloon League" was spoken of by John S. Richie, of Scotts Mills, and something of its aims and work was the subject of some practical discussion looking towards organization amongst Oregon Friends. A carefully prepared paper on "The Atonement" was read by Aaron M. Bray, clerk of the quarterly meeting. "Prevailing Prayer" was a theme beautifully presented by Prof. Julia S. White, and provoked helpful remarks from several. Levi D. Barr, the pastor at Newberg Meeting, gave a stimulating address on the need of revival work and the methods to be employed.

At the meetings for worship the ministry of our friends, John Henry Douglas and Louisa P. Round, was much appreciated.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING.

Haworth, Kansas.—Pleasant View Quarterly Meeting was held at Mill Creek, 10th, 11th and 12th of the Eleventh month.

We had the acceptable company of Israel and Catharine Osburn, from Mount Ayr Monthly Meeting, Kansas.

The business sessions were well attended, and the business transacted in love and harmony.

Seventh-day evening was devoted to Sabbath School work. The subjects discussed were: "The Pastor and the Sabbath School," "Personal Responsibility," and "Sociability and Its Effect."

The house was well filled on First-day at eleven o'clock; also in the evening.

The gospel was preached in demonstration and power in each session of our quarterly meeting. May the Lord be praised for sending our dear brother and sister this way. O. L. K.

Cemaron, Oklahoma.—Iowa Monthly Meeting was held at River View, Cemaron, Oklahoma, Eleventh month 11th. This being the edge of the monthly meeting, there were not as many members present as usual, but it was a time of great blessing. We had the acceptable company of Nathan W. Ridgway, of Stanwood Monthly Meeting, who had been holding meetings at this place at night for four weeks. His labors have been of untold good to the community. While there were only four renewals and conversions, yet the professing Christians (Baptists, Campbellites, Comeouters, as well as Friends) were brought nearer to a unity than for years, some being raised to "the higher life," and some brought down to a living level. We realize that Nathan W. Ridgway was surely sent by the Lord.

Wm. Neal, of Emporia, was on his way to the monthly meeting, having left the railroad at Mulhall, and taking the hack, met with a very serious accident when within seven miles of our place. The hack upset, bruising him badly and breaking his collar-bone. His first words, when we found him at 1 o'clock at night, were "Praise the Lord."

Nathan W. Ridgway's address will be Tryon, Oklahoma, for a few weeks.

News and Events.

In a fierce battle at the Graspan Hills, a few miles south of Kimberley, Lord Methuen, commanding the British forces, gained a decisive victory over the Boers. The latter consisted of 2,500 men, who were blocking the English advance for the relief of Kimberley. This was the second victory for the British troops within a few days. The first was in a battle at Belmont, seven or eight miles south of Graspan, when the heights of the town were successfully stormed. The British advance in force to the relief of Ladysmith has not yet begun. An official despatch from General White, at Ladysmith, dated the 22d, states that the situation was unchanged, and the troops were well and cheerful. A despatch from Pretoria says that from President Kruger down every one is in favor of fighting, and they believe they will succeed in annexing all the beleaguered towns. The flag of the "United Republic," now ready, bears the Orange cross. The Boers expect the war to last from four to six months, when they believe they will possess South Africa.

An engagement, last week, between Anglo-Egyptian forces and Dervishes, in the Soudan, resulted in the utter rout of the latter and the death of the Khalifa, Abdullah el Taishi. Had it not been for the escape of Osman Digna the victory over the Dervishes would have been so complete that their rule in the Soudan would probably have been permanently destroyed; but as Osman Digna is a most important and powerful factor in all the movements of the Dervishes, the backbone of the opposition to English rule still remains unbroken. The battle of Omdurman, on September 2d, 1898, was a veritable slaughter of Dervishes. On that day 10,000 were killed, and thousands of others were captured. That the Dervishes were willing to return to the fray after such a crushing defeat is an indication of their daring and courage, and may presage further opposition under the leadership of Osman Digna, who, it has been suggested, may declare himself successor of the dead Khalifa.

By the forced marches of the American troops to the north of Luzon, Aguinaldo's followers have been scattered and his government apparently hopelessly broken. General MacArthur now occupies the house in Bayambang where the last Filipino Council of War is said to have been held, on the 10th. It is reported that at this Council the futility of further united resistance was recognized, and it was agreed that the Filipino troops should disperse and hereafter follow guerilla methods.

After weeks of sickness, Vice-President Hobart died at his home in Paterson, N. J., on the 21st. The funeral occurred on the 25th. Almost unknown in national politics until his nomination for the Vice-Presidency, in 1896, he achieved during the short time that he held office a recognized

Quality

It is the high quality of Royal Baking Powder that has established its great and world-wide reputation.

Every housewife knows she can rely upon it; that it makes the bread and biscuit more delicious and wholesome—always the finest that can be baked.

It is economy and every way better to use the Royal, whose work is always certain, never experimental.

There are many imitation baking powders, made from alum. They may cost less per pound, but their use is at the cost of health.

position in the administration. He was particularly valued by President McKinley, and as President of the Senate he displayed, in marked degree, the powers necessary to govern that body.

The Emperor of Germany, together with the Empress and their family, reached England last week on a visit to Queen Victoria. The visit is declared to be purely a family affair, and entirely devoid of political significance. Coming at the present crisis in English affairs, however, many are disposed to give the visit a political color, and to regard the incident as having some bearing upon the South African trouble.

Let this truth be present to thee in the excitement of anger,—that to be moved by passion is not manly, but that mildness and gentleness, as they are more agreeable to human nature, so also are they more manly. . . . For in the same degree in which a man's mind is nearer to freedom from all passion, in the same degree also is it nearer to strength.—Marcus Antoninus.

LIFE'S RUBBER TIRES.

The remark was made by our six-year-old, but it happens occasionally that the wisdom of six years is worth considering. We were talking of a sunny visitor who had just departed, and of her courage and cheerfulness amid many trials, when the small boy added his comment.

"Yes, I like her. She just goes over bumps as if her heart had rubber tires."

We laughed at our bicycle boy, but the description was a forceful one nevertheless. The cheerful heart did bound lightly over hurt and fret and all the rough places of the earthly road as if there were, indeed, some protecting tires about life's wheels. And should not the same be true of us all? What does our trust in God's care and love and in the final working together of all things for good amount to if it does not speed us more smoothly on our ways? The friction and the jarring, the sensitiveness to every little roughness of the road, must be because we have not learned to see our faith aright—the blessed tire of faith that should keep our spirits buoyant and our course steady.—"Well-spring."

TO LIVE FOREVER.

That for which we were made is immortality, and our journey is rough, straight, sharp, burdensome, with many tears. Our journey is not to the grave. I am not growing into old age to be blind, and to be deaf, and to be rheumatic, and to shrink a miserable cripple into the corner, shaking and tottering, and forgetting all that I ever knew. The best part of me is untouched. I sit enshrined within the me. The soul, the reason, the moral sense, the power to think, the power to will, the power to love, the power to admire purity and to reach out after it,—that is not

OUR GREAT LANDMARK.

Some years ago a party of travelers were passing over the Swiss mountains. After they had gone a considerable way, it began to snow heavily, and the oldest of the guides gravely shook his head and said: "If the wind rises we are lost." Scarcely had he spoken, when a gale arose, the snow was whirled into multitudinous drifts, and all marks were obliterated. Cautiously they moved on, not knowing where they were, and almost giving themselves up for lost. At length one of the guides, who had gone a short way before them to search out the path, was heard shouting, "The Cross! The Cross! We are all right." And what had the cross to do with it? It was one of those religious memorials which one so frequently meets in Roman Catholic countries, and this one, set up at first by some private individual for a personal reason, had become at length a well-known and easily recognized landmark for the traveler. Hence, the moment the guide saw it, he knew where he was, and what direction to take. But what was true of that symbol in their case, is true in all instances of the thing which it signifies; for we may always know where we are when, with our eye of faith, we can see Christ crucified.—"Western Christian Union."

HIS GREATEST DISCOVERY.

When Sir James Simpson, the great Edinburgh physician, was asked by an interviewer, "What do you consider the greatest discovery you ever made?" he replied, "That I have a Saviour." The answer was as creditable to his understanding as to his heart. There is no knowledge to compare with the knowledge of Christ, in whom the Father has revealed Himself; it is life eternal. And there is no knowledge for which we should feel so grateful, if we possess it. The simple candor of the greatest doctor is also an example of courage in confessing Jesus before men, well deserving of imitation. There was no cant about it.—"London Christian."

SEEING SELF.

We look at our neighbor's errors with a microscope, and at our own through the wrong end of the telescope. We have two sets of weights and measures; one for home use and the other for foreign.

Every vice has two names, and we call it by the flattering and minimizing one when we commit it, and by the ugly one when our neighbor does it. Everybody can see the hump on his friend's shoulders, but it takes some effort to see our own.—Dr. MacLaren.

The Larkin Plan
GIVES You the Beautiful Desk

The Whole Family supplied with Laundry and Toilet Soaps for a year at Half Price. Sent Subject to Approval and Payment after Thirty Days' Trial.

THE FIRST AWARD OF THE OMAHA EXPOSITION WAS GIVEN THE LARKIN SOAPS.

THE "CHAUTAUQUA" DESK. Solid Oak throughout. Hand-rubbed finish. Very handsome carvings. Beveled plate mirror. Desk is 5 feet high, 2½ feet wide, writing bed 24 inches deep. Drop leaf closes and locks. Brass curtain rod.

It is Wise Economy to Use Good Soap. Our Soaps are sold entirely on their merits, with our guarantee of purity. Thousands of Families Use Them, and have for many years, in every locality, many in your vicinity. Ask us for your neighbors' testimonials.

AFTER 30 DAYS' TRIAL, if the purchaser finds all the soaps, etc., of excellent quality and the premium entirely satisfactory and as represented, remit $10; if not, notify us goods are subject to our order. We make no charge for what you have used.

If you remit in advance, you will receive in addition a nice present for the lady of the house, and shipment day after order is received. Money refunded promptly if the Box or Premium does not prove all expected. Safe delivery guaranteed. The transaction is not complete until you are satisfied.

Many boys and girls easily earn a "Chautauqua" Desk or other premium free, by dividing the contents of a Combination Box among a few neighbors who readily pay the listed retail prices. This provides the $10.00 needful to pay our bill, and gives the young folks the premium as "a middleman's profit." The wide success of this plan confirms all our claims.

THE LESSON OF THE CROSS.

A poor woman suffering from deep affliction was given the cross with its little purple ribbon by a devoted member of the King's Daughters. The meaning of the initials was not explained. In puzzling over them she read them in this order, "I. H. N.," and, through her grief, found this message, "Iron nails hurt." It was

ECCENTRIC GENEROSITY.

Nicholas Longworth, one of the wealthiest citizens of Cincinnati, a few years ago, was noted for his eccentric charities.

He was plain and careless in his dress, often looking more like a beggar than a millionaire. Indeed, it afforded him no little amusement to be taken for a mendicant, as he several times was in the course of his life.

One cold winter evening a poor man called at the house very thinly clad, and Mrs. Longworth improved the opportunity to suggest to her husband that he should give away a certain "hard times" overcoat which she had grown tired of seeing him wear. He readily assented, and Mrs. Longworth, much pleased that the objectionable garment was out of the way, placed a fine broadcloth one upon the rack, where he would easily find it in the morning.

But Mr. Longworth went off to business without it, and came home at noon, greatly to his wife's chagrin, wearing a new coat of the "hard times" variety.

At another time Mr. Longworth was accosted by a deserving beggar at the entrance to his warehouse.

"What do you need most?" Mr. Longworth asked.

"A pair of shoes," was the reply.

"Ah, yes, I see," said the millionaire, with a quick glance at the man's feet. He kicked off his right shoe—his shoestrings were seldom tied—and said, "Try that on, my man. How does it fit?"

"Illigant, yer honor."

"Then try that one, too," said Mr. Longworth, as he kicked off the other shoe. "How will they do?"

"Illigant, yer honor! illigant! May many a blessing—"

"Well, well, go now," said the merchant, "that'll do;" and then, calling a boy, he sent him to the house to ask Mrs. Longworth for another pair of shoes.

The boy soon returned.

"Mrs. Longworth says there isn't a pair of shoes left in the house," said the lad; "you've give 'em all away."

"All right," laughed Mr. Longworth. "Run down to Mr. Hart's and ask him to send me up a pair of shoes, the kind I always buy; and mind, here's a two-dollar bill, but don't you give more'n a dollar and a half for them."

SUBSCRIBERS' WANTS.

This department of "Subscribers' Wants" will be found of value by anyone wishing to reach the Friends with a small advertisement. It has already done excellent service for those who have used it. The varied character of the notices shows that its value is confined to no particular class of "want" advertising, but that it may be used with advantage by all who have anything to advertise. Five lines, one time, cost only 25 cents; additional lines 5 cents each. Extra insertions at the same rate.

BOARDING.—Persons visiting Washington can obtain good accommodations in private house. Convenient, by electric cars, to all parts of the city. Rates reasonable. Laura N. Wilson, 1456 Corcoran Street, Washington, D. C.

A NEW BOOK FOR FRIENDS

Practical Christianity

By RUFUS M. JONES

This is a collection of short, practical articles on important religious subjects. It deals with questions which every thinking man must meet in a practical way, and it contains a positive message for the times. In these fifty-three essays many of the most important phases of the spiritual life receive consideration, and the notes of hope and victory, and faith in the overcoming life, are everywhere manifest. It is a book which should appeal to all classes of Christians. The book also contains a suggestive chapter on "The Message of Quakerism." 12mo. 208 pages. Bound in silk cloth, gilt top. Price, $1.00, postpaid.

John C. Winston & Co., 718 Arch St., Philadelphia

ARE YOU RIGHT WITH GOD?

Some time ago a criminal, who was serving a long sentence in one of our large penitentiaries, escaped and fled from justice. After a few years he returned to the east with a wife and family, and, settling down in Brooklyn, he opened a drug store. One day, when he had become well established in business, an officer entered his store and placed him under arrest. Before going to the jail the officer accompanied him to his home in order that he might take farewell of his family. The wife was entirely ignorant of her husband's past history, and in breaking the news to her, asked her if his home life had not been what it should have been. "Have I not been a kind husband?" he asked. "Yes, you have been all that," came the reply. "And have I not been a loving parent?" "Yes." Then he went on to tell how he had been a convict, and how he escaped, and was now under arrest and on his way back to jail. Now, here was a man who was all right with his family and all right with his fellows, but all wrong with the state.

And so the question with us is not how we stand with our family, nor how popular we are in society, nor how much esteem we can earn in business. The question of the age is: Have I been regenerated through the atonement made in my behalf? —D. L. Moody, in "Ladies' Home Journal."

TEST YOUR SINCERITY.

Test your sincerity by the manner in which you control or resist your evil thoughts. Do you suffer your thoughts to tamper with evil, to dally with wrongdoing? If so, you are not sincere.

The tyrant Nero tried to degrade some of the great Roman nobles to as low a level as his own, by making them appear as actors in the arena on the stage. To disobey was death. Florus was bidden thus to appear, and, doubting whether to obey, consulted the virtuous and resolute Agrippinus. "Go by all means," answered Agrippinus. "Well, but," replied Florus, with astonishment, "you yourself refused to obey." "Yes," answered Agrippinus, "because I did not deliberate about it."

The categorical imperative, the naked absolute prohibition of duty, must be im-

BOUGHT WITH A PRICE.

And so, my friends, I have set the truth before you by which the course of all your years, stretching far on beyond this life, must be determined. I point you to the Saviour, who alone can set you free from the curse of sin, from the bondage of the law, from the fear of death, by bringing you into His love and service. You are bought with a price. Christ has come and borne your burdens with you, and your sins for you. Henceforth there is not one of you that need be anxious about the forgiveness of your sins, the salvation of your souls. It is purchased and paid for, if you will accept it. But with it YOU ARE PURCHASED, and you belong to the Lord Christ. He has conquered sin, so that you need not be its slave any longer. Now let Him conquer you by His great love, and so the victory will be complete. Give yourself to Him; live as bravely, as purely, as faithfully, as nobly as you can in His name and for His sake.

ST. NICHOLAS

For Young Folks — Edited by Mary Mapes Dodge.

THERE is plenty of fun in ST. NICHOLAS as well as the best that can be provided in literature and art. The history of this magazine is one long story of success—success in making boys and girls better as well as in producing what has always been called "The best of children's magazines."

In 1900 there will be an important historical serial of Colonial Life in America by Elbridge S. Brooks, ten long stories by Ruth McEnery Stuart, Mary Mapes Dodge, and other well-known writers (each story complete in a single number), serial stories by the authors of "Master Skylark" and "Denise and Ned Toodles" and other popular books for young folks, a serial story for little children, "Josey and the Chipmunk," contributions from Theodore Roosevelt, Ian Maclaren, John Burroughs, and other well-known writers, several new departments, including "The St. Nicholas League" and "Science for Young Folks," with fun and frolic in rhymes, pictures, stories, and puzzles. Everything in ST. NICHOLAS is illustrated.

THE MESSAGE OF PEACE.

Bid the din of battle cease;
Folded be the wing of fire;
Let your courage conquer peace,
Every gentle heart's desire.

Let the crimson flood retreat,
Blended in the arc of love,
Let the flags of nations meet;
Bind the raven, loose the dove.

At the altar that we raise
King and kaiser may bow down;
Warrior knights above their bays
Wear the sacred olive crown.

Blinding passion is subdued,
Men discern their common birth,
God hath made of kindred blood
All the peoples of the earth.

High and holy are the gifts
He has lavished on the race;
Hope that quickens, prayer that lifts;
Honor's meed and beauty's grace.

As in Heaven's bright face we look,
Let our kindling souls expand;
Let us pledge, on Nature's book
Heart to heart, and hand to hand.

For the glory that we saw
In the battle-flag unfurled,
Let us read Christ's better law,
Fellowship for all the world.

Julia Ward Howe, author of "Battle Hymn of the Republic,"

THE COMMON PEOPLE STILL HEAR HIM GLADLY.

ONE of the most beautiful testimonies to the present power of the Gospel, and a most encouraging indication that human hearts are still eager for the simple story of the world's Christ, is to be found in the striking success of evangelistic work in France. A single evangelist, in twelve months, has gathered a congregation of one hundred and fifty persons in one of the greatest Catholic strongholds of that country, and the people in more than twenty neighboring villages are begging him to come and tell them the story of the Gospel. There are hundreds of passages in Stephen Grellet's "journal" which indicate a hunger on the part of the people of France—and, in fact, of all the continental countries which he visited—for this old, old story. Human nature is very much the same the world over, and men everywhere feel the need of a Heavenly Friend. Let some one come into any place on the globe and really succeed in telling the simple message of God revealed in Christ and of a Saviour's love, and the people respond heartily to it. The pitiable fact is that so few people on the globe ever do really hear the Gospel. France has been a Christian nation—called in history "the most Christian nation"—for more than a thousand years, and yet what chance has an ordinary Frenchman ever had of hearing and understanding the Gospel of Christ? He knows only of the beggarly substitutes which have taken its place, and he has to choose between superstition and atheism. He does not make this choice because he likes it, but because he does not know of anything else. Tell him about Christ—the Christ who revealed God—and at once his heart burns within him and he feels drawn to Him.

The same thing is true here in America. There is no lack of genuine response when the Gospel really comes to a place, but how seldom our people get an opportunity to hear the plain, simple facts their souls need and hunger for? If it makes an earnest Christian sad to see the multitudes who go to no place of worship on the Lord's day, it makes him hardly less sad to see how badly the churches understand their missions, and how far from attractive most of them are to the people generally. Most people now-a-days do not care about theology or theological discussions, and they will not go to hear abstractions. There are men who are born with a natural taste for such things, but the rank and file of people are not born that way, and they want something else. They have real burdens to bear, the real problems of life to meet, temptations to battle with, and hard, strenuous struggles to go through; they want to hear of a genuine Comforter and Sympathizer, they want to know of a personal Saviour who really does save them—not in the abstract, but in fact; they need to be lifted out of their hard, narrow lives by some heavenly vision, and to be pointed to some one who can inspire them, support them, and give them a goal of life. The battle of creeds, the bitter quarrels of factions, charges of "narrowness" on one side and of "heresy" on the other, engender only disgust and general disbelief on the part of the multitude. It stultifies the church and nullifies its power. It is only when a church positively interprets Christ and makes men see Him that it reaches the people; it always does reach them when it does that.

Who cares to employ a doctor who is always slandering the other doctors of the neighborhood, and who comes into the sick room and sits down to discuss the merits of homeopathy over allopathy or vice versa? No, we go for a doctor who can treat our case. The religious lesson from this is perfectly plain.

THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

THERE has never been a year in the history of THE AMERICAN FRIEND when it has received such unmistakable evidence from its readers that it is appreciated and loved, as during the year now closing, and these tokens of appreciation have come from every section of our country, and from almost all the different types of Friends. One who studies closely the present situation knows perfectly well that it is impossible to please and satisfy everybody—in fact, that cannot even be attempted—and there is no immediate prospect of a time when it will be an easy task to edit a periodical for American Friends. But Friends are coming to see more clearly the difficulties of the situation, and they take a broader and fairer outlook than formerly.

We believe that everybody now realizes that this paper stands for a positive, vital, virile, apostolic type of Christianity; that it is not the organ of some party or sect to fight the battles of its supporters,—it aims at nothing less than a clear interpretation of Christianity for our age.

It is not conservative, it is not radical, and it does not try to "split the difference" between the two and take a position half way between. It is aiming simply to set forth a Christianity which will bring its readers out of parties and factions and above narrow lines of cleavage and imperfect forms, and unite them in an onward movement which shall one day produce a prevailing and victorious kind of Quakerism.

This victorious type will not be produced by withdrawing from the world, by hedging about our principles and testimonies, by exalting our external "peculiarities," nor again by becoming afraid to face all the facts which our age is bringing before us, and by narrowing ourselves down to traditional views and theories. If we hope to save those who are with us in the ship, we must "believe God" and go forth with a constructive message. This paper has not been and never shall be an advocate of anything destructive of the Christian faith, but it cannot ignore the situation which really exists to-day in the thinking world, and it cannot meet it by any ostrich method of hiding its head in the sand. It is no time now to part company with intelligence and calm judgment, or to run to hysterics. We need to find out what is unshakable and eternal and build upon it. This must be our mission. Some few may not realize that we are steering by celestial luminaries, but we trust that our absolute faith in God and His Christ will be felt by everybody, and that this paper—the child of much prayer—may in the coming year and years be the means of bringing our beloved church to a place of greater power and increasing usefulness.

GENERAL CHURCH NOTES.

The American Moravian Board of Church Extension reports its receipts, for the year ending August 31st, as having been $6,200, while its expenditures were $7,600.

The Methodist Missionary Society has appropriated $1,130,000 for missions the coming year. Of this amount $629,625 was appropriated to foreign missions, and $471,213 to home missions.

In the closet of an old synagogue in Cairo, where wornout books and manuscripts had been thrown for a thousand years, a remarkable discovery has recently been made of two-thirds of the lost Hebrew original of the Apocryphal Book of Ecclesiasticus.

While the condition of Dwight L. Moody has been such as to cause anxiety and apprehension, it is gratifying to be assured that he is greatly in need of rest, and that there need be no immediate alarm as to his health, even though his active days are over.

There has lately died, in Plainfield, N. J., a Baptist minister, Robert Lowry, well known as the writer of several popular hymns. He was best known as the author of "Shall We Gather at the River?" "Where

Is My Wandering Boy To-night?" and "I Need Thee Every Hour." He was 73 years old at the time of his death.

The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts (Church of England) received last year $661,775, of which $89,970 was from legacies. It has 787 ordained ministers in the field, including 12 bishops and 2,900 lay teachers, with 3,200 students in its colleges, and 38,000 children in its schools in Asia and Africa.

Professor Herron, who for some time has held the chair of Applied Christianity in Iowa College, has resigned. His views and teachings on social problems are unusual and subversive of the present order. Because it seemed that his continued occupancy of the chair would injure the college and keep away endowments, he retired voluntarily, without any enforced action on the part of the trustees.

The General Missionary Committee of the Methodist Church have officially placed themselves on record in the case of Brigham Roberts, by calling upon Congress to expel him. They also called upon every member of the Senate and House of Representatives to use his utmost endeavor and to exhaust all possible means to secure action by the Fifty-sixth Congress, proposing an amendment to the National Constitution making polygamy, under whatever guise or pretense, a crime against the United States, punishable by severe penalties, including disfranchisement and disqualification to vote, or to hold any office of honor or emolument under the United States or territory thereof.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

BENJAMIN WEST.

BY AUGUSTINE JONES.

The Society of Friends in America and England has produced some of the most gifted men in poetry, painting and oratory, of their respective periods. West and Bradford, Whittier and Bright.

These men were looked upon at first with solicitude by their fellow members, who were anxious that they be not too much attracted by mortal glory, and drawn away from the ancient simplicity of the truth.

The strict Puritan tenets, the intensely practical teachings, which discarded the ornamental, and cared only for those things which ministered to bare existence in this world, and bent every energy and resource towards preparation for the life to come, were not much in sympathy with the beautiful arts.

Neither places of worship, homes, nor persons were adorned and made attractive to that Divine instinct for beauty, which exists in every normal human being. The unconscious education in refinement from art, influencing in the direction of culture, and the love of the true, the beautiful, and the good, and so on, to the beauty of eternal life, or beauty of holiness, was little recognized.

"Beauty is truth, truth beauty,—that is all Ye know on earth, and all ye need to know."

—Keats.

The amazement of excellent worthies at the mysterious ways of the Divine purposes, in the endowment of the above Friends with these gifts, which enabled them to enrich the world, can hardly in this day be comprehended.

The consternation of that hen, which had through deceit been induced to brood over duck's eggs, when she stood solitary and alone on the shore and observed the witless daring of her whole family floating away on the water, was similar to the solicitude respecting these sons.

William Bradford told the writer that he had not the confidence and support in his art of his own family until Whittier dedicated his poem "Mary Garvin," to him. We cannot be too thankful that one of these able men placed the great seal of his approval on his younger friend. How much we owe to Bradford, for his seven trips to the frozen north to bring to our firesides the wonderful scenery of frost, icebergs, and mountains of that wild, desolate region with its curious, strange inhabitants. He was a true poet of nature also.

Sir Philip Sidney said, "Nature never set forth the earth in so rich tapestry as divers poets have done."

Another has said with equal affection and felicity:

"There is no glory in star or blossom, Till looked on by a loving eye."

—Bryant.

It is not our purpose to write the biography of West or to praise his "ten-acre pictures." He was never what he aspired to be—a great master; but he made more than four hundred pictures, it is said, and sold many of them for great prices. He painted all the crowned heads that could get to him, became the court painter in the reign of George III., and succeeded Sir Joshua Reynolds as President of the Royal Academy. He was the instructor of two distinguished American painters—John Trumbull and Gilbert Stuart. He was a great man in his day, in his profession. It is only when compared with giants in art that he has to be let off with explanations.

Benjamin West was born at Springfield, Pa., Tenth month 10th, 1738, and died in London, Third month 11th, 1820.

When West was fifteen years of age, his parents were forced by the endowments of their son to meet for him and for themselves the troublesome question with which we began, and which has vexed the Society of Friends nearly more than a century and a half since his birth: What are the legitimate uses of art?

His parents, unable to determine the matter, submitted it to the Friends meeting. We have, I am glad to say, the whole truthful story from Galt, the biographer of West, who obtained it from the painter himself, it is said.

The spirit of speech first descended on one John Williamson, as follows: "To John West and Sarah Pearson West, a man child hath been born, on whom God hath conferred some remarkable gifts of mind; and you have all heard that, by something amounting to inspiration, the youth has been induced to study the art of painting. It is true, that our tenets refuse to own the utility of that art to mankind, but it seemeth to me that we have considered the matter too nicely.

"God hath bestowed on this youth a genius for art. Shall we question His wisdom? Can we believe that He gives such rare gifts but for a wise and good purpose? I see the Divine hand in this; we shall do well to sanction the art and encourage this youth. . . . Painting has hitherto been employed to embellish life, to preserve voluptuous images, and add to the sensual gratification of men. For this we classed it among vain and merely ornamental things, and excluded it from amongst us. But this is not the principle, but the mis-employment of painting.

In wise and pure hands it rises in the scale of moral years "had made him a painter," on his left, while around them gathered the whole assembly.

At the conclusion the women rose and kissed him, and the men one by one, laid their hands on his head. He regarded himself as dedicated to pure and sacred art at this meeting, the influence of which followed and directed him all his life, and entered into all of his work. The grave simplicity of a Friend in his looks, manners and deportment, distinguishes him in every station in life. He painted a portrait of himself in the costume of a Friend, which has been much admired.

We have no reflections to make upon the Puritanic methods of the Society of Friends. They had a mission to concentrate upon the great fundamental matter of Spiritual religion. If it be said that they were narrow, the answer is that a thin blade cuts deeper excellence, and displays a loftiness of sentiment, and a devout dignity worthy of the contemplation of Christians. I think genius is given by God for some high purpose. What the purpose is, let us not inquire; it will be manifest in His own good time and way.

"He hath, in this remote wilderness, endowed with rich gifts of a superior spirit this youth, who has now our consent to cultivate his talents for art; may it be demonstrated in his life and works that the gifts of God have not been bestowed in vain, nor the motives of the beneficent inspiration, which induces us to suspend the strict operations of our tenets, prove barren of religious and moral effect!"

West, we are told, had taken his station in the middle of the room, his father on his right hand, his mother, whose recognition of his gift and kiss at seven than a thick dull one. One vital point they must force into the very veins of the modern world; and to do this for all time they must set aside every superfluity and hindering thing, and put the essential truth with authority and power. The world later, would find the ever growing web of truth and of human knowledge. Even Jesus Christ himself, to whom all the mystery of life, and the measureless progress of research of men to be, was known because all things were made by him, nevertheless confined his service to the unfolding of the mysteries of the kingdom of God. They could bear no more then. But still around that center of Himself and His doctrine, all human progress and history centers. There was, and is, the germ of all that righteousness that exalteth men and nations, which has leavened civilization.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

DANIEL HILL.

As one who was intimately associated with Daniel Hill during later years in connection with the Peace Association of Friends in America, I wish to express what I think all must feel, who have worked with him, a sense of personal loss in his removal from us by death. He has for about thirty years, as secretary of the Peace Association of Friends in America, been prominently connected with the work of Peace among Friends in this country. When I first became actively associated with him he was already an old man, but his interest was in no degree dimmed. He seemed to have no other thought than to do what he could, wherever he could, to help forward the cause. He had no private ends to serve, nor did the increasing feebleness incident to advanced years discourage him or prevent him from planning for future work. He would say with a smile "My hand trembles so, I cannot write, so I use a typewriter." In the same way, he would speak of his various infirmities. But it did not seem to occur to him that there was any reason for not using what strength he had left to the utmost. He never lost his hope or his enthusiasm. He never objected to letting others do what he had been accustomed to do, when it seemed best. His work was one that in the nature of the case required great patience. He sowed seed, and knew that in many cases the fruit could not be seen till after many days. His methods were quiet. It was not his gift, as a rule, to arouse public enthusiasm by his addresses. It was not often that any brilliant effect was produced by his effort. His devotion was not fed by such things as these. It was fed through faith in God as manifested in Jesus Christ, and it had to resist that hardest obstacle of all, a great mass of cold indifference. Yet it continued undimmed.

We know that through his efforts people—not a few—have come to see the truth of the Gospel of Peace, and have ceased to advocate war. We know that hearts have been cheered through his messages, and been turned to God. Yet the cause of Peace, which was so near his heart, stands in the most pressing need of those who will labor for her, live for her, die for her if need be. Shall not his example be a call to someone to come forward for this as his or her life work? It has all the marks of a cause of God. It is true. It is needed. The work is difficult. It is, when consistently carried out, unpopular. It is the cause of Christ. Shall we not carry it forward?

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

JOHN G. LANE.

BY WILLIAM L. PEARSON.

"The work of righteousness shall be peace."

The three score and ten years a Friend, one of the best products of a faithful family of Friends, under the blessing of our Faithful Father, is the story I would briefly tell, fully conscious that the best of life's book must ever remain untold.

Born at Chappaqua, N. Y., in 1830, his pious parents brought up the teachable child, the fifth of nine children, in the way of the Lord. From the steady Christian training at his mother's knee, and in the country home, through the grace of God, he went forth a practical exemplification of the new birth. He died the 29th of Fifth month, 1899, at his home in Philadelphia.

His earlier years were lived on the farm and in the neighborhood school. Then a few years, now in the Friends' School, Providence, R. I., now at home, and now teaching in the public school, and the young man married Anna J., daughter of Beriah Swift, in 1852, and became a manufacturer, in partnership with his father-in-law, at Millbrook, N. Y. Some years after the death of the latter, his brother, William J. Lane, was admitted into the business in 1866, and Lane Brothers manufactured a number of useful articles, some of their own invention, until the increase of business brought them, in 1882, to Poughkeepsie, for better facilities of transportation. The business prospered and their excellent products have become well known throughout the country. The younger brother William, is now at the head of the firm, an older surviving brother, David H. Lane, of Chappaqua, N. Y., is a well known and useful minister in the Society of Friends. His first wife having died in 1876, John G. Lane some years later married her niece, Elizabeth Wills, with whom he had several years of happy union until her death, five years ago. His stepdaughter, Elizabeth S., and her husband, John J. Albertson, and their daughter, of Magnolia, N. J., with whom he usually spent his summers, traveled with him extensively in this country, in Europe and in the East.

John G. Lane was great in goodness and in good works. The beatitudes of the meek and the pure in heart, which he would not have ventured to claim, were his own heavenly heritage. He was a person of peculiarly pure spirit. His genuine humility and uncompromising integrity kept him above all suspicion as a business man and did much to assure success. It is no small career for such a one to guide a large number of employees, and indirectly their families also, in the development of his and their prosperity, of theirs and his own character, while he breathed among them the spirit of love and truth. To wear well the responsibility for others that falls to righteous modern manufacturer or merchant is far better than "To deduce one's birth

From loins enthroned and rulers of the earth."

Such a character as John G. Lane's must find an outlet in sweet sympathy with his fellow-men. Entirely unostentatious, this gentle and generous man exercised a benign influence among relatives and friends, and sometimes he voiced a helpful message of the Master to the meeting for worship. And thankfulness and thoughtfulness were also his companions in the common walks of life. He places money in the hands of discreet friends for the needy whom they may know, modestly adding, "Don't use my name." On the street car, observing a little lame girl carrying a parcel, like a Good Samaritan, he requests the conductor to stop while he learns her name and address. After returning to his home, hundreds of miles distant, he arranges, through a friend, for the little one's medical treatment. He passes through the empty halls and class-rooms of a western college on a Sabbath afternoon, and, standing on the snow-covered front steps, remarks, "I know of no place where a little money would do more good." Ere the summer passes he sends three hundred dollars to that institution. His mind turns to foreign missions and he makes inquiry of the needs of Friends' new building at Ramallah, Palestine, and offers three hundred dollars for its plumbing. These are only a few facts from a life full of good fruits, incidentally known to the writer before their author's death. One of his quiet acts of kindness was a gift of a thousand dollars to the Friends' Meeting in Millbrook for the purchase and dissemination of good literature. Many missions and Sabbath schools and deserving individuals will miss his bounty bestowed almost without the knowledge of his most intimate friends.

The reader will now be prepared to learn that this man of God had "long desired that his own New York Yearly Meeting might have an institution more in keeping with the age in which we live," and had cherished and perfected the plan to apply one hundred thousand dollars for that purpose, "trusting that others may be incited to do likewise, and that under the Lord's guidance blessings may result to future generations."

Thus our friend's takes its place in a class of only two great gifts far apart by Friends for institutions that should directly influence the life and work of the Society of Friends. The other was the gift of a like amount by Obadiah Brown to Friends' School, at Providence, about 1825.

Of John G. Lane, it may be fairly and freely said, "The liberal deviseth liberal things, and by liberal things shall he stand." He had confidence in the future of the Society of Friends, whose peaceful principles he found to have power in practical life, and whose pure purposes tended greatly towards calm-mindedness and prosperity. His faith was that the Lord would raise up members especially qualified for the great educational work he had in view. He believed others would emulate his example, and thus Quaker gold would wisely go into generous gifts and bring about the golden age of Quakerism.

One discovers the reasons for most of John G. Lane's benevolence in his unusual interest in young people, whose characters he would help form and whose faculties he would bring into the best service. It was doubtless this that prompted his great bequest. Appreciation of noble, pure minds had led him into companionship with the best books. The words of comfort of his precious little Bible, his companion by land and by sea, were a "very present help" during the long hours of pain and loneliness of his last illness, which was "a time of praising the Good Master for His manifold blessings."

CORRESPONDENCE.

IN THE AMERICAN FRIEND, No. 47, page 1112, under head of "The Origin and Growth of Education Among Friends in Western Indiana," by Harlow Lindley, I notice this statement, under head "Rush Creek:" "A committee was appointed to take charge of the work (building a schoolhouse), and in Eleventh month, 1837, they reported that Rush Creek schoolhouse had been completed, at a cost of $8,650." In 1836, when I was ten years of age, my parents removed from Morgan County, Indiana, and settled within 40 rods of Rush Creek meeting and school house, both of which at that time were small, one-room hewed log houses, neither of which, I would think, cost to exceed $100.00, if that much, both being built previous to the year 1836. For a number of years following the winter of 1836-37, I attended school in the said one-room hewed log house, and my teachers were David Hadley, Green Mote, Jehu Newlin, Eleazar Kersey, and Mahlon H. Newlin, I think in the order named, and most if not all of them more than one term. Though I, being a "farmer's boy," attended only winter terms, I taught the summer term of said school in 1853, in a one-room frame house that I would think did not cost over $400.00 or $500.00 at the outside.

FRUITS OF RIGHT AND WRONG DOING.

Malachi 3: 13-4: 6.

In the last lesson the Jews complained that the Lord had not kept His promises. At least, that was the real burden of their complaint. The prophet told them that this was their own fault. They had treated the Lord in a way they would not have dared to treat their earthly governor, and therefore they suffered as the result of their own conduct. In the present lesson, which is a continuation of the last, the same thoughts are expressed in a somewhat different way.

13. "Stout." Hard. "Wherein have we spoken against thee?" Revised Version. Spoken one with another—complained one to another—kept on complaining.

14. The prophet answers the question. They had been brought up with the idea that those who served the Lord would be outwardly blessed, but they had come to look upon the whole thing as a matter of profit and loss. They had kept the ordinances; they had kept the fasts (walked mournfully) (compare Zech. 7:3, 5 8:19); and still have not prospered.

15. "Call the proud happy." There seems to be a reference to verse 12, "And all nations shall call you happy." They go on to say, be this as it may—we, ourselves, call the proud happy—they are the successful and prosperous people. "Yea, they that work wickedness are built up; yea, they tempt God and are delivered." Revised Version. It seemed to them that it was the wicked who prosper. It was inexplicable to them.

16. "Then they that feared the Lord spake one with another." Revised Version. What has been said represents the views of those who, while outwardly carrying out the Law, did not carry it out in the spirit. Now, those who really feared the Lord, encouraged each other by converse, or exchange of views with each other. These the Lord heard and keeps their names before Him, so that when the time comes they will receive their reward (verse 17). This is the more common interpretation of the verse. There is, however, another, which follows the septuagint rendering: "Thus spake they that feared the Lord," etc. If this view be taken, the explanation would be that the pious Jews were troubled at the apparent non-fulfilment of the promises, and at the apparent prosperity of the wicked, and so were, in New Testament language, made to stumble. The prophet encourages them and says that God will make it right in the future—that the promises of Deuteronomy are sure, but their fulfilment belongs to the future—the harvest will show which is the grain and which the tares. Either interpretation is allowable. "Thought upon his name." It is a good thing to think upon the Lord, and upon what He has done for us.

17. "They shall be mine . . . in the day that I do make, even a peculiar treasure." Revised Version. In the day which I create. Compare 4:3, and Psalms 118:24. Titus 2:14. "Spare them." Keep them from harm. "That serveth him." A son who is obedient and dutiful.

18. "Then shall ye return," etc. "And ye shall once more see the difference between the righteous and the wicked; between him that serveth God and him that does not serve him." All the questions which could not be answered before will be answered then.

4:1. "The proud and all that do wickedly." Those that seem to be prosperous and yet sin.

2. "You that fear my name." To the righteous will come the healing, the joy, the true prosperity. Compare Psalms 37:1, 5, 6. "Ye shall go forth, and gambol as calves of the stall." Revised Version. Full of life and vigor they shall feel like leaping for excess of joy.

3. "Ye shall tread down the wicked." The righteous will be victorious; evil will no longer triumph.

4. "Remember ye the law of Moses. What ever may be the apparent result, ye must obey; if you do not understand, you must still obey. Compare Ecclesiastes 12:13. See Deuteronomy 4:10.

5. "Elijah, the prophet." A prophet who shall be like Elijah. "There is no more reason to suppose that this refers to Elijah in person than to imagine from Hosea 3:5; Ezekiel 34:23; Jeremiah 30:9; etc., that David himself is to come in the flesh." Elijah is the great representative of the prophets. As such he appeared on the mount of Transfiguration with Moses, the great representative of the Law. It is a striking fact that here the Law and the Prophecy are likewise united. "Before the great and terrible day of the Lord come." Revised Version. Compare Joel 2:31.

6. "And he shall turn," etc. This passage is not very clear, and various interpretations have been given. If the emphasis which Malachi lays upon right obedience be remembered, the following interpretation would seem to be in accord with the spirit of the context. The Law, which is old, must be obeyed; and yet the new must be taken into consideration. The Law is to be fulfilled, not overthrown. Compare Isaiah 29:22-24 and Luke 1:17. John the Baptist distinctly denied that he was Elijah (John 1:21); but he must have meant by this that he was not the old Elijah raised up, for Christ speaks of him as Elijah (Matthew 11:14; 17:12). "The Baptist" was Elijah in the sense of the prophecy, not in the sense of the men who asked the question (John 1:21; Matthew 11:14). "One to do an Elijah work was foretold, not the reappearance of Elijah himself." "Curse." Rather, a "ban."

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. "He doeth all things well."
2. The Lord hears the voice of His children.
3. The Sun of Righteousness does arise with healing in His wings to those who believe and trust.

Seventh-day, Twelfth mo. 16.—Prayer and love.

Matt. 5: 23-24; Mark 11: 25-26.

The Disciples asked our Lord a great many irrelevant and even foolish questions, but here for once they were intensely practical and also sympathetic with His own mood. When they heard Him pray, He made them feel as though they did not know how. There was something in His manner, in His access to the Father, in His confidence, that transcended all their ideas of prayer, and with true humility they asked to be taught how to pray. In answer He gives them the model prayer, the abbreviated form of which appears in our lesson, and the complete form in Matthew's gospel.

Let us notice first, however, that Jesus taught His disciples how to pray by His own example, and the instructions follow the example. Take your Bibles and read carefully every passage in the four gospels that refers to the prayer life of Jesus. Note His times of prayer, and the results that follow in His ministry. Note the different moods of His prayer—now only a sentence full of joy, as He looks up to heaven, and again an agony as He falls upon His face upon the ground. Note carefully His dependence upon prayer, His unselfishness, His confidence. So shall we, too, learn how to pray.

Jesus also left us most explicit instructions as to prayer. He tells more about how to pray than how to preach, and with good reason, for he who knows how to talk to God, will not fail in talking to men. His first lesson, in the sixth chapter of Matthew, is on secret prayer, and there we are taught to have a place for prayer, a time for prayer, a separation unto prayer, and an answer to prayer. That place may change from day to day if we change our abode, and the length of time may be greater or less owing to the needs of the hour, but there is one thing that must never change—that place must always be filled with the air of the Father's presence. Prayer cannot be uttered in any other atmosphere. As only air makes the sounds of speech, as it passes over the vocal chords, so the Father's presence alone gives life to prayer.

Prayer is not telling God about things He does not already know, but it is coming into full accord with the thought of God in things He does know.

Then the manner of all prayer is taught in the model prayer. Note that "thy name," "thy kingdom," "thy will," come first. Self-seeking is fatal to all prayer. Our needs must be rightly adjusted to His name, kingdom and will. Note again, that the phrase, "As in heaven, so on earth" has for its antecedent not merely the phrase which precedes it, but also the three phrases concerning the name, the kingdom, and the will. It is the prayer for the realization of the heavenly, the ideal state of things on earth. To say, "Thy will be done," is not merely the cry of a heart broken with its sorrow; it is the triumphant shout of the faith that overcometh the world.

But the limits of this article forbid even so much as a word concerning the many other teachings of Jesus concerning prayer. Read the gospels, and carefully note them all. Make an analysis of them as you would of any other lesson given you at school, for you are now in the school of Christ to be taught how to pray. Learn the simplicity of prayer; that is is not childishness, but childlikeness. Learn the familiarity of prayer, that it is not irreverent slang—a sad pity it is that this must be said—but that it is holy and reverent confidence, as one talks to a friend far superior to himself in every way, but who has condescended to our low estate with an infinite tenderness. Learn, as in this lesson, the importunacy of prayer, not because God is hard to be moved, but because we rise but slowly to the true sense of the emergency; or because God's ways of answering prayer take into consideration obstacles that He does not deem it wise to remove at once by an arbitrary exercise of power.

We shall never graduate from the school of prayer while in this world; there will always be more advanced courses of study. Let us not tarry in the lower forms. Let us be ready for the Master's promotions.

THE LONDON CONVENTION OF 1900.

Extensive preparations are being made on the other side for the holding of the World's Christian Endeavor Convention next Sixth month 14th to 19th. Our English brethren will give us a hearty welcome without doubt, and some arrangements will be made for a meeting with English Friends who are interested in our work. Will all American Friends who think of attending the London convention kindly send their names and addresses to Myrtle Lightner, secretary of the Friends' Union, Sabina, O., so that we may know something about our representation from this country?

Inasmuch as no International Christian Endeavor Convention will be held in the United States next year, arrangements are being made for a meeting of the trustees of the United Society early in Twelfth month for conference and prayer. A report of such a meeting may be expected in these columns when such a meeting is held.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

THE ORIGIN AND GROWTH OF EDUCATION
AMONG FRIENDS IN WESTERN INDIANA.

BY HARLOW LINDLEY.

Between the years of 1840 and 1850 there was much speculation indulged in among the people of the country with regard to new schemes of education. Two systems especially were tried with somewhat similar results. The one was called "The Socialistic System," founded in organized communities; but on account of the selfishness of human nature this system was not a success.

The other was known as the Manual Labor System. This system was advocated to a greater or less extent, and ventures along this line were made in many localities with varying degrees of success; yet the experiment in the main proved a failure.

In 1845, Harvey Thomas, of Pennsylvania, conceived the idea of establishing such a "Manual Labor School" somewhere in the West. He was a man of years of experience in educational matters, and was an earnest advocate of education. He came West and was much impressed with Bloomfield as the place for the location of such a school. The subject began to be agitated among the Friends of this locality, and the first definite action in regard to the matter was taken at a meeting of Western Quarterly Meeting's Committee on Education, held in the fall of 1845, at which time the matter was referred to a sub-committee for further consideration, with the direction that they make out a report and produce to the quarterly meeting, as well as to the next regular meeting of the Educational Committee. At the regular meeting of the committee, held Second month 13th, 1846, the following report was given, which marks the first official action towards the establishment of a school for higher learning in this section of the country.

REPORT.

"We, the committee appointed to consider the subject of establishing an agricultural manual labor school within the limits of Western Quarterly Meeting, report:

"1. That the establishment of such a school in which science should be taught with reference to the arts of life, especially chemistry in relation to agriculture, would, we think, tend greatly to improve the common method of farming.

"2. That, as idleness is the parent of vice, and as bodily inactivity is the frightful source of disease, the manual labor plan would tend to promote health of body and advancement in religion and morality.

"3. That as, in our opinion, the greatest improvement in learning is to be obtained in the most economical way only by a continued daily effort pursued for years, the manual labor plan, by preserving the due balance between his mental and physical powers, would tend to maintain the health of the pupil, while it enabled him to pursue his studies at a diminished expense.

"4. That from the testimony of our English Friends, as well as from other sources, we are convinced that great improvement in learning is not incompatible with daily manual labor.

"5. That we believe such an institution, properly conducted, would tend much to the benefit of society, both from a literary and religious point of view.

"6. That we think the school should be visited monthly by a deputation of the Quarterly Meeting's Committee on Education, in order to see that it is conducted consistently with the principles of Friends.

"Signed on behalf of the committee,

"EXUM MORRIS."

This report was received by the Quarterly Meeting's Standing Committee, "after a time of deliberation and free interchange of sentiment thereon," and the following proposition was agreed upon by the committee and was directed to be forwarded to the quarterly meeting:

"The Quarterly Meeting's Committee on Education having for some time past had the subject of education under consideration, in connection with what is called 'The Manual Labor System,' has at length come to the conclusion that several important advantages would result to our prosperity, to our society and to the community by adopting and putting into operation a system of education that would, at the same time, be calculated to promote the health and improvement of both minds and bodies of the pupils, and such a system, we believe, may with propriety be called a 'Manual Labor' system. The following are some of the benefits which we apprehend would result as a consequence from our schools if properly conducted on the plan above alluded to.

"First. The art or science of agriculture, which is of vital importance to the human family, would receive many improvements and would be considerably elevated toward that state of respectability and honor to which it is justly entitled.

"Second. A large amount of vice and immorality, which naturally and generally result from a course of idleness, would be avoided, as well as much tribulation and suffering, the consequences of disease, which is frequently the effect of bodily inactivity and breathing a vitiated atmosphere.

"Third. As this system is calculated to preserve a due balance between the mental and bodily powers of the pupils, the health and vigor of both would be maintained, and consequently a larger amount of mental improvement and bodily production in a given time would result than is the result under our present system, in which this balance is not preserved.

"We therefore conclude that ultimately this system will deserve and receive a preference on the score of pecuniary economy.

"The committee is not prepared to say what means would be necessary or might be employed in promoting so desirable an object. We are, however, of the opinion that there should be a school on the above-named system somewhere in the verge of the quarterly meeting, and that in doing so it will be necessary to purchase a small farm for the purpose, and we would suggest the propriety of appropriating the Quarterly Meeting School Fund to that purpose, believing, as we do, that such an appropriation would be as near in accordance with the wish of the donors as any that we may expect. With these views, we propose that the quarterly meeting take the subject under consideration and dispose of the same as our present situation and the importance of the subject may seem to require."

The reports were received by the quarterly meeting, and a committee was appointed to further consider the proposition and plans and report in three months. They made the following report to the quarterly meeting, which was held Fifth month 9th, 1846:

"To Western Quarterly Meeting, to be held Fifth month 9th, 1846:

"The committee that was appointed by the quarterly meeting in Second month last, to take under care for further consideration and examination the whole subject of establishing a quarterly meeting school, as introduced by Bloomfield Monthly Meeting and the Quarterly Meeting's Committee on Education, hereby report that we have paid considerable attention to the subject, though perhaps not so much as its importance justly claimed at our hands. We have received some accounts from the Oberlin school in Ohio, which, upon the whole, are quite favorable to the manual labor system of education. We have discovered several opportunities for procuring a lot of land whereon to locate such an establishment; but the one which seems most agreeable to the views of the committee is twenty-two and a half acres of land offered by Thomas Rubottom, off the south end of his farm, nearly all cleared, for three hundred and thirty-three dollars, there being a prospect of getting ten or fifteen acres of woodland adjoining. The committee would recommend a school house of the description—that is, a frame, 36x50 feet, one story of twelve feet high, divided into three apartments, and warmed by three fireplaces and one stove, the estimated cost of which, when finished, with all the necessary seats, desks, etc., about $715.00.

"The committee, after examining and considering the subject as well as they have been enabled, united in judgment that the manual labor system of education is consistent with the destiny and physical constitution of man, and that if well conducted would be a means of promoting the comfort and happiness of the human family. We are also of the opinion that our Quarterly Meeting School Fund may with propriety be applied in promoting the establishment of a quarterly meeting school on any improved system, which fund amounts, at the present time, to about $664.00.

"Signed on behalf of the committee,
"ALFRED HADLEY, Clerk of the Committee."

The report was satisfactory to the meeting, and another joint committee was appointed to have the subject under further consideration, to open free subscriptions for the promotion of the institution, to ascertain if the lot of woodland mentioned in the report could be purchased and upon what terms, and if it seemed more satisfactory, to look for a more suitable location for the school and report to the next regular session of the quarterly meeting. At this time (Eighth month 8th, 1846) the committee reported that the land in question could be purchased, but on account of certain complications the committee "came to the conclusion that it would be right to make further examination, and ultimately united in judgment that the following described lot or lots of land are favorably situated and circumstanced for the promotion of our object—namely, 22½ acres offered by Thomas Rubottom, off the north end of his land, at $15.00 per acre, and about 8 acres adjoining, offered by Nathaniel Newlin, off the south end of his land, at $10.00 per acre." The committee also reported that they had obtained, by subscription papers, $467.50 for the promotion of the school.

Directions were given for the purchase of land, and a committee was appointed to superintend the building of a schoolhouse. As a result of this action, the following reports were made at the quarterly meeting, held Eleventh month 14th, 1846:

"In accordance with the direction of last quarterly meeting, we have contracted with Thomas Rubottom for 22½ acres off the north end of his farm, at $15.00 an acre, on the consideration that we pay $160.00 in advance, and the remainder (being $173.75) by the 15th of Fifth month, 1847, it being the best terms on which we could procure the said tract of land, we thought it best to borrow $160.00 and pay over, for which we are to pay six per cent per annum. We have also purchased 5 22-100 acres of woodland of Nathaniel Newlin, adjoining the above named tract, at $10.00 per acre, amounting to $52.20, one-half to be paid by the 15th of Eleventh month, 1846, and the remainder by the 15th of Fifth month, 1847. The rights of both of the above named tracts have been duly executed and recorded at an expense of $1.25, making the whole sum of indebtedness incurred for the above named tracts of land, $387.10.

"Signed on behalf of the trustees, Eleventh month 14th, 1846,
"JAMES SILER, Clerk."

The Building Committee reported as follows:

"To Western Quarterly Meeting, to be held Eleventh month 14th, 1846:

"The committee appointed by the quarterly meeting, in Eighth month last, for the purpose of having erected a house for the accommodation of Western Quarterly Meeting School, hereby report: Immediately after last quarterly meeting we proceeded to make the necessary arrangements to insure the prompt and speedy completion of the building; hence we entered into a contract with a Friend to furnish the necessary sawed lumber for the completion of said house, for which we agreed to pay him $138.60, against the 25th of Twelfth month next, and in order to insure the more speedy completion of the carpenters' and joiners' work, etc., we proceeded to divide it into two principal jobs, and entered into a contract with two different individuals for its speedy and prompt performance, accordingly, one to the amount of $355.69, and the other, $219.50, to be paid, one-half by the 15th of Eleventh month, 1846, and the remaining half by the 15th of Fifth month, 1847; and for clearing off lot, hauling some extra materials, together with some other incidental expenses, we have contracted debts to the amount of $74.81, making the whole amount of the debt contracted for the completion of said building, $778.60, and said building is in such a state of forwardness that the main school room is now about in readiness for the reception of a school.

"Signed on behalf of the committee,
"JAMES SILER, Clerk."

That the school might be productive of the best results and influences, as anticipated by its promoters, the Committee on Education presented the following rules for the government of the Manual Labor School, which were approved by the meeting:

"Rule 1. As the principle objects of the quarterly meeting, in attempting to establish this school, are to afford our youth an opportunity of acquiring a liberal education without sacrificing their bodily health, or losing their relish for moral pursuits or the simplicity of our religious profession, it shall be the duty of those having charge of the institution to endeavor to inculcate the distinguishing testimonies of our religious society, to introduce into the school the most useful studies, and particularly those which illustrate agriculture; to adopt the practice of manual labor by the students as fast as circumstances will permit, and to instill into their minds its importance and respectability; to advocate the principles and practice of temperance, plainness, moderation and economy in all things, and to conduct the school in every respect in a manner consistent with our religious principles.

"Rule 2. The scholastic year shall be divided into two sessions of 120 days each. The school shall be vacated two days for each quarterly and one day for each monthly meeting and the time made up.

"Rule 3. In admitting students, a preference shall be given first to members and the children of members of Western Quarterly Meeting; second, to members of the Society of Friends. No student shall be admitted under ten years of age, nor any who are not sufficiently advanced to enter the lower classes.

"Rule 4. No student shall be admitted for a less time than one session, unless there should not be enough of session students to fill the school; in that case students will be admitted and charged from the time of entry to the end of the session. No deduction will be made for the absence of pupils, unless it is occasioned by their sickness or other disability.

"Rule 5. The school shall be under the superintendence of a committee appointed by the quarterly meeting, whose duty it shall be to employ teachers, to regulate prices of tuition, to visit the school, to attend the examination at the close of each session, to make such other rules and regulations as may seem to them necessary to promote the object of the quarterly meeting, and to report the situation and progress of the school to each quarterly meeting.

"Rule 6. The school shall be under the immediate direction of a principal teacher, aided by as many assistants as the number of the pupils may require.

"Rule 7. The principal and assistants shall be compensated by the money arising from tuition, which shall be paid to the treasurer of the superintending committee, and if at any time any money remain from this source, after paying teachers, it shall constitute a fund to supply future deficiencies.

"Rule 8. The principal and assistants shall conform to the principles of the Society of Friends in dress and address, and shall endeavor to inculcate all the distinguishing testimonies of the society, particularly to those who are members. When the weather and health permit, they shall attend mid-week meetings with the pupils at Bloomfield meeting house."

These rules were approved by the quarterly meeting and Alfred Hadley, Solomon Allen, Exum Morris, Hudson Middleton, John Hayworth, Wright Cook and Jeremiah Moffat were appointed to have a superintendence of the school in accordance with these rules.

During the year of the planning and construction of this school, Harvey Thomas was engaged in teaching at Sugar Plain, near Thorntown, and Center, near Darlington, as they offered the best inducements for such a teacher.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

WM. PENN CHAIR OF ETHICS.

BY WILLIAM G. HUBBARD.

It ought to be a matter of interest to the readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, that there are good Friends' schools, academies and colleges stretching clear across this continent from Oak Grove Seminary in Maine, to Pacific College in Oregon and Whittier Academy in Southern California, and also that a full quota of educated Friends are holding places in public schools and state colleges, normal and other schools. These leave the impress of sturdy Quaker morals and Friendly ideas wherever they teach. It has been deeply interesting to the writer in his travels and visits to colleges and high grade schools to learn of the good work being done by Friends. For example, the Nashville University is presided over by a Friend, the schools of Bowling Green, Kentucky, are superintended by a Friend, the president of the State University of Indiana is a Friend, and so on northward as far as Grand Forks, North Dakota, I have found Friends in many educational institutions and always a haven for good.

And it will be of interest, possibly, to many to know that a few weeks ago The American Temperance University passed resolutions to establish a "William Penn Chair of Ethics," and also decided that a Friend should always fill the professorship of that department when a suitable Friend was available. What a wonderful opportunity there is for our Society. The department will consist of moral philosophy, mental philosophy and a brief course of instruction in the Bible. In other words, here is the character building department of a college placed at the command of Friends. The other departments will teach history, language, mathematics, and other things useful and ornamental; all of which will make the pupils more or less intelligent. But it will be pre-eminently the work of the Wm. Penn Chair to impress on the minds and hearts of the 300 to 400 young men and young women in attendance, such principles of morals and of truth as will make men and women of them. What an opportunity for character building! Who can measure such a field for usefulness!

What and where is the American Temperance University? It is an "interdenominational, co-educational, non-sectional, non-partisan institution," with a board of trustees representing several denominations.

It is the only college in the United States with the word "temperance" in its name.

The objects of its founders are thus stated:

1. The building and equipping of a great school dedicated to the Christian Temperance idea.
2. To train students for leadership in the anti-saloon forces and along all lines of civics.
3. To establish a school of Applied Science for young men and women, to meet the demand of the age for trained heads and skilled hands for life's practical duties.

It is located at Harriman, Tennessee, 256 miles south of Cincinnati and 50 miles east of Knoxville. The town has 3000 inhabitants and no saloons, prohibition being written in every deed. It is on the banks of the Emory River near the Emory Gap in the Cumberland mountains. The mountain scenery is beautiful and the climate delightful and healthful.

And there is a great educational awakening in the mountains and valleys of Eastern Tennessee, and many of the young people are struggling for liberal education.

The school was started only five or six years ago but has an attendance of over 300 students. It started without money or property but under the energetic management of Chancellor J. F. Spence, D.D., LL.D., the school has so far won confidence as to have received gifts to purchase three valuable buildings and has ground and stone foundation for another. But so far they have no endowment, and are praying that those blessed with means may endow the college so they may extend help to the worthy young men and young women who long for education but have no money.

They must also have an endowment for the Wm. Penn Chair, and are hopeful that Friends may become interested in helping in that particular phase of their work. The writer, having repeatedly visited the school, became deeply interested in its work, and feels that here is an open door for Friends that we ought not to neglect.

Is not the open door a call to service? But this article is growing too long and I must close by saying that if Friends wish further information, I shall be glad to answer questions if I can, or, what is better, they may write to the president, J. F. Spence, at Harriman, Tenn.

Columbus, O.

News from the Field.

Boulder, Colorado.—This place, at the foot of the Rocky Mountains, attracts many summer visitors. It has also a vigorous University. The few Friends there have lately gathered for regular meetings and for First-day school teaching. They have also taken some steps to become acknowledged as a preparative meeting. Albert B. Bayes, who has been some weeks in Colorado, coming from Yorkshire, England (an Elder), was at this meeting on First-day, the 26th of Eleventh month, and gave an address.

William A. Blair, of Winston, N. C., sends us the following item:

"Many of your readers have been interested in the work for colored people that is being done here in North Carolina by the Slater Industrial and State Normal School. Many of our friends in Philadelphia have contributed to the work, and have seen that we were working along different lines from any other institution, from the fact that we had enlisted the best white people in the South in the work. It will, therefore, give those interested pleasure to learn that a citizen of this town, who has not before taken any special interest in this work, comes to us and offers to give a cash donation of $5,000, provided we will raise a like amount, to establish a hospital for colored people and a training school for colored nurses in connection with the Slater School. A number of other citizens have offered to assist in this work, and we feel that it is a great step forward. I thought the readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND who have been contributing to the school would be interested in this. The number of students is larger than ever before, and we have more students than we have accommodations for."

A Friend in good standing sends us the following information: Having recently been victimized by a young man claiming to be a member of our Society from England, and believing that he is bent on pursuing a similar course elsewhere, I think it best to warn Friends against him.

He is well educated, having been at a Friends' school, and is a good linguist. He has an intimate knowledge of Friends in England, and unquestionably well connected. He fell into dissolute habits and has been leading a wanderer's life, and has become a source of grief and sorrow to his parents.

He came to my place of business in great distress, admitting his wrong-doing, and plead for a chance to redeem himself. For something over a week he gave evidence that he was in earnest; sought, and apparently obtained divine help, and we trusted that there was a real repentance, and that he would win back a reputation for worthiness and requite the love and forbearance of the dear ones at home.

We supplied his needs and clothed him respectably, and were in the way of obtaining a desirable position for him. He has left for parts unknown to us. Having everything to gain by availing himself of the opening made for him to redeem himself, we can but conclude that he is unworthy of the efforts made to assist him.

He was candid enough to confess that his father had earnestly pleaded with him not to go among Friends. He pleaded his extremity and desire for counsel and help, as justifying him in doing so.

He is about 33 years old, medium height, wore a moustache, and has a peculiar gait in walking—result of a broken limb or some deformity; claims to be an accountant.

We feel sad to lose the young man, far more than the monetary loss, and wish we might learn of his being fully reclaimed. Yet if he is bent on a sinful course, we feel it a duty to warn Friends against him.

William G. Hubbard has recently been giving addresses in some of the colleges of Pennsylvania on "The Conference at The Hague; Its Work and Objects."

One of the prominent Friends of Iowa Yearly Meeting writes: "I hope you may succeed in making THE AMERICAN FRIEND the best paper ever published in the interests of our church. I admire the sound doctrine and practice you advocate, and the aggressive spirit you manifest."

S. A. Wood, of New Providence, Iowa, has just issued three articles in pamphlet form: "Christology, or the Doctrine of Christ's Person;" "Pristine Man and Evolution (reprinted from THE AMERICAN FRIEND), and "A Strong Abode for the Feeble."

Joseph James Neave, of England, has been visiting and attending meetings in Philadelphia and vicinity for the past ten days.

The London "Friend" announces the publication, by Headley Bros., of an interesting collection of humorous poems by James N. Richardson, whom many American Friends remember with rare pleasure. We give the notice as printed in the "Friend:"

"More than twenty years ago the question of music and singing occupied a good deal of time in discussion in some of the large meetings of Friends in the north of Ireland, not least at Lurgan and at Grange. For the purpose of amusing an invalid relative, James N. Richardson and one of his sisters put into mock-heroic verse the story of one such discussion, describing the leading characters on each side, the line of argument, and the final result. A limited edition was subsequently published and immediately sold out. Some years later a similar debate at Grange was likewise done into verse, and the whole has now been printed in neat book form, adorned with a large number of excellent portraits, excellently reproduced, of the heroes and heroines of the contest. A number of the personalities are well-known Friends of to-day, which greatly adds to the interest of the book. Among Irish Friends the ballads will naturally be of especial interest, and on this side of the Channel many of the characters described are so well-known that the book will be appreciated here also.

Beneath the overflowing humor of the verses a note of sadness may be detected. Such intense struggles over the minor matters of the law are disastrous for the welfare of the Church; and the closing words of "The Quakri at Lurgan" may well be taken to heart where they are needed:—

"Now list, the Munster Quakri
Each other have so cleft,
That scarce in all Munster
Is breath of Quakri left.
In Leinster, too, the Quakri
Go out to other creeds,
And hardly is there ministry
Enough for Quakri needs.

"Now from these dire examples
A timely warning take,
Or else will Ulster follow
Most surely in their wake.
And so, good Ulster Quakri,
Have done with these sad jars,
Shake hands, ye Ulster Quakri,
And make no more your wars.

"See widows lowly wailing,
See orphans on the street,
Clothe naked, feed the hungry,
And give to them to eat.
'Be friends,' ye Ulster Quakri,
And look to Him above,
Who is not Lord of faction,
But is the Lord of Love."

AN INCIDENT AMONG THE DOUKHOBORS.

Eliza H. Varney, in relating her experiences among the Doukhobors, in the Eighth month last, writes under date of Eleventh month 15th, 1899, from Bloomfield, Ontario, as follows:

"I was most mercifully cared for. I feel I have every cause for thankfulness to my Heavenly Father for His care and protection; for His giving ability to labor in their midst, as He alone can, I humbly trust, not only to their comfort, but edification. I must say, I love them; and that love of the truth was largely reciprocated by us all. Our interpreter seemed to be brought into deep and tender feeling at times, by what he was interpreting. His name is ———. He is a Russian, but not a Doukhobor, unless he has joined them since. . . . One thing I think I have not written thee, and knowing thee likes to preserve all such things, I will tell thee what occurred at the close of one of our meetings. A man stepped into the open area, around which the Doukhobors were yet standing, and said, 'when he was a very young man, he remembered that in the year 1818, two of our Friends (Stephen Grellet and William Allen) came to their meeting in Russia, and one of them said if they continued faithful to their religious and peaceful principles, the time would come when they would have to endure persecutions; and many would have to lay down their lives in prison, and in various ways; and their property would be taken from them, and they would be driven from their homes and exiled; and when all this was done, God would hear their cry and answer their petition, and would make a way for them—take them out of that land to a strange land and to another nation, another people, and another language, or speaking people, where they would make their homes. And when they settled in that land, God would send some of our people (Friends) to visit you (or them). And I have lived to see that all fulfilled this day.' And he bowed his aged head almost to the earth, in thankfulness to God. His name was Evan Marshintoff. He was a remarkably smart old man of 97 years of age.

"J. G. said when they went to the fields he out-walked many of the younger men. . . . There are several hundred still in prison in Siberia. Word came a few days ago, that there was no hope of their ever being released. The weeping and wailing was hard to be witnessed—to see wives and mothers mourning for their loved ones in that far-off land. And no remedy. It is hard to think of what it must be to endure such trials. Oh! if your Nation and ours could intercede for them—that the captives might be set free and sent to their loved ones here!"

IOWA YEARLY MEETING.

William Marshall, of Glenwood, Iowa, writes as follows: "A late letter from Cordoba, South America, from Catharine Linton, contained a telegram from her husband, John Linton, then in Cochahamba Province, and expecting to start the next morning for the Province of Oruro, that he and Rufus Garratt were well; dated Tenth month, 1899. She also says the mission at Cordoba enjoys THE AMERICAN FRIEND very much, especially the Cruikshank family, to whom it goes, and hope some one who reads this will pay for it next year, that it may continue to go to South America as a missionary until I can return there. My wife's health improves very slowly.

"The church work is prospering at Glenwood. We are looking to the establishing of a meeting in the city soon, and Bur Oak has been granted a monthly meeting ten miles south of the city. D. B. Cook, of Bear Creek, is coming to assist in the work at West Oak, four miles north of Glenwood, so that we can devote more time to the city work."

Colorado Friends.—Bevan Binford, of Friends' University, has been spending a few weeks in and around Denver. He is very much improved in health, but will spend a month or more in the Colorado Sanitarium at Boulder.

Joseph Allen, of Camby, Ind., will make his home this winter with his son, in Denver.

Charles E. Lewis, of Newberg, Oregon, spent the summer at Paonia, Col., with his cousin, Alfred Hadley. The latter has strong hopes of establishing a Friends' meeting there some time. The Denver Friends appreciate very much the services of Charles E. Lewis as pastor. The meeting is in a very encouraging condition.

Bevan Binford reports a very interesting meeting and Sabbath school at Boulder. They have sent in a request to Hiawatha Quarterly Meeting for a monthly meeting. The organization will have over twenty members to begin with. The services are all held in the Seventh-day Baptist Church.

NOTICE.

Correspondence with the Central Office of the Peace Association of Friends in America should now be addressed to the Acting Secretary, Rachel Bailey Hill, Peace Association of Friends in America, Richmond, Indiana.

RICHARD HENRY THOMAS, President.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING.

Rose Hill Quarterly Meeting was held at Argonia, Kansas, Eleventh month 3d, 4th and 5th, 1899. Ira S. Bundy, of Sterling, and Achsah Kenyon, of Lowell, Kansas, were the visiting ministers. We also had the company and help of Eliza H. Carey, our Yearly Meeting Superintendent of Evangelistic Work.

At our meeting of Ministry and Oversight, on Sixth-day afternoon, Brother Bundy and Sister Carey were very earnestly engaged in the ministry of the word. Meeting small. On Seventh-day morning the house was nearly filled. The messages of our brother and sister were full of spiritual life and power. The committee to attend the opening of the University Monthly Meeting at Wichita, made their report. Advance sheets of the minutes of our late yearly meeting were received and action taken thereon.

On Seventh-day evening Sister Carey delivered a very able and instructive address on missions. She also preached a very practical and excellent sermon on First-day morning, Ira Bundy speaking at night.

Achsah Kenyon remained over several days, visiting the families. Susie E. Allen has charge of the work at Argonia, as pastor, and is well received. E. S.

Stella Academy, Woods County, Oklahoma, began school Ninth month 12th under very favorable circumstances. The enrollment up to the present is over fifty. After the yearly meeting E. Howard Brown came to hold a series of meetings; the work resulted in definite blessings to twenty-seven souls and a strengthening of the church. From Stella he went to Clay and held a ten days' meeting. The results were not manifest, but we have God's promise that His word shall not return unto Him void.

Stella Quarterly Meeting occurs the first Seventh-day in Twelfth month, at Ringwood, Oklahoma. Ministers or workers desiring to attend will be met at Enid, Oklahoma, by dropping a card to John Hays, Ringwood, Oklahoma. LAURA A. COPPOCK.

Thomas Newby, who died recently at his home, 2619 Holmes Street, Kansas City, was a widely known and valuable Friend. He came from Indiana to Kansas in 1857, during the Free State struggle, and was selected, on account of his Christian character, for positions of important public trust, which needed faith, as well as good judgment and tact. He, with his noble wife, endured much toil and hardship in those pioneer times, and were important factors in the formation of good government, and in advancing the interest of Friends in Kansas, holding important positions in the various meetings, both being elders for several years. Their loss will be much felt in all lines of church work. In 1880 they moved to Kansas City, and he built up a transfer business, of which he was the head for nearly twenty years; also was instrumental in organizing the meeting in Kansas City. Their house was ever a home for the Lord's children, in which encouragement and comfort were cordially given. A large company attended the funeral, among whom the twenty drivers and their wives were sincere mourners. It was a precious season of thankfulness for such a life.

NEW ENGLAND YEARLY MEETING.

Portland, Me.—On First-day, the 29th of Tenth month, Nathan and Esther Frame, who had just concluded their service at Winthrop Center, came to Portland and began a series of meetings in the Friends' meeting house. The blessing of the Lord rested upon their labors from the beginning, for there were several conversions the first evening, and others followed from time to time during the three weeks which they remained with us, and many sought and found a better experience. At one of the evening meetings Esther Frame gave an account of her call to the ministry, which was preceded by a brief discourse on women's ministry, by Nathan Frame. A large and deeply interested company attended this meeting, which was one of the most powerful of the series. These servants of the Lord have been a blessing not only to our own meeting, but to the Christian work of the city, and their work was conducted too wisely to leave any occasion for the charge sometimes made against evangelists, that they leave the church worse for their coming. They went from here immediately to their home, in Jamestown, Ohio, where they will rest for a few days. ELLISON R. PURDY.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING.

It will be remembered that the yearly meeting undertook, in connection with Western Yearly Meeting, to raise $15,000 towards paying off Earlham College debt. More than $17,000 has now been raised, and the matter will be continued in the hope that the new century, beginning with 1901, may see the debt entirely eliminated.

On the 19th of Eleventh month Daniel Hill was laid away in the sleep of the tomb, being 82 years old. For more than half a century he has been a prominent Friend. Born in Wayne County, raised in Randolph County, Indiana, he has, during all his life, been warmly attached to the church of which he was a birthright member. About four years he was connected with a work for orphans at Cincinnati, Ohio. Later he originated the "Christian Worker," at New Vienna, Ohio, and during many years continued as its editor. During a much longer time he was editor of the "Messenger of Peace." About twenty-five years—until his death—he served as secretary of the Peace Association of Friends in America. He has been a recorded minister the past thirty-five years. But, after all, it is not the positions he held that speak loudest for him. To those who have known him best there has been the consciousness that he was "an epistle of Christ, written not with ink, but with the spirit of the living God." He was an earnest advocate of peace, temperance and righteousness, and was consistent in his life. His ministry was ever fresh and always suggestive of clear, forcible thought. He virtually fell at his post of duty, for he was at his usual place near the clerk's desk throughout the late yearly meeting, and, save from his age, none would have thought his time of departure was just at hand.

John Henley, living on the same street, and less than a square from the residence of Daniel Hill, in the city of Richmond, Ind., and still more advanced in age, was buried twenty-four hours later. He has had the remarkable distinction of having been present at every annual gathering of Indiana Yearly Meeting from the first. He has been of the type so well known among Friends, of generous hospitality and practical honest living.

Willis D. Peacock, of Fairmount, in the prime of manhood, passed away, after a severe attack of pneumonia. He leaves a wife and two children.

On account of the Indiana State Christian Endeavor Convention occurring at the time of Whitewater Quarterly Meeting, the latter, by authority of the Representative Meeting of the Yearly Meeting, has been postponed to meet on Sixth-day, Twelfth month 8th, at 10 a.m., the Meeting of Ministers and Elders meeting at 10 a.m. the preceding day.

Indications point to a larger attendance of Friends at the State Christian Endeavor Convention. The Friends' Rally will be held at South Eighth Street meeting house, and will be led by Albert J. Brown, pastor of Indianapolis meeting.

Elwood Scott is in the limits of Canada Yearly Meeting, engaged in evangelistic work.

Oscar Moon, an Earlham student, makes regular visits to Friends' meeting at Greenfield.

A letter from Gurney and Elizabeth S. Binford states that they have arrived in Japan after quite a stormy voyage. They are already actively engaged in their missionary work.

Allen Jay recently made a visit in Iowa and dedicated one meeting house while there. He intends devoting himself largely to raising the Earlham debt the coming year. He is very active, in addition to ordinary duties, serving as chairman of the Evangelistic Committee in connection with the State Christian Endeavor Convention.

Earlham College sustains its reputation in athletics, and is preparing for the contest in oratory, with a strong hope of success in that field.

Leonidas E. Speer, pastor at Whitewater, has been assisting in a series of meetings at Winchester.

DIED.

HAINES.—Hinchman Haines, son of Levi and Sarah Haines, died at his home, Gray, Ind., Eighth month 8th, 1899, aged 79 years. He was a loyal Friend, deeply interested in the work of the church, clear in his testimony and steadfast in his life. For more than forty years he served either in the station of elder or overseer.

News and Events.

The advance of Lord Methuen to the relief of Kimberley is being fiercely resisted by the Boers. On the 28th the English troops were attacked at Modder River, a few miles south of Kimberley, by 8,000 Boers. After a desperate battle of ten hours' duration the Boers were defeated and driven from their position. The fierceness of the engagement may be readily understood in the light of Lord Methuen's despatch, in which he declared that the battle was "the bloodiest of the century." The loss on both sides was very heavy, the English losing many in killed and wounded, including a large number of officers. In Natal Colony the opposing armies, each about 20,000 strong, are now supposed to be massed about Frere, between Colenso and Estcourt, and reports of a great battle are daily expected.

SCHOOL TEACHER.

Pulled Down Hill.

"I relied on coffee so much to keep me up, having been told that it was a mild stimulant, that I hardly knew what to do when I found it was really pulling me down hill. My sleep was badly broken at night and I was all unstrung. Am a school teacher and was exceedingly nervous.

"When it became evident that I was in a very bad condition, I was induced to leave off coffee and try Postum Food Coffee. Mother made it at first, but none of us could endure it, it was so flat and tasteless. She proposed to throw the package away, but I said, 'Suspend judgment until we have made it strictly according to directions.' It seems she had made the Postum like she always made coffee, taking it off the stove as soon as it began to boil. Mother was so prejudiced against it that she did not care to try it again, but I got sister to make the Postum next morning strictly according to directions—that is, allow it to boil full fifteen minutes after the boiling begins.

"We were all amazed at the difference. Sister said it was better coffee, to her taste, than the old, and father, who is an elderly gentleman and had used coffee all his life, appeared to relish the Postum as well as my little brother, who took to it from the first.

"For awhile, mother clung to her old favorite, although she was sick more or less of the time. Finally, one morning, she drank a cup of Postum by mistake, believing it to be coffee. We joked her so much about it, because she did not discover the difference, that she finally admitted she had occasionally taken a sip of the Postum Coffee, and from that time she proposed to use it altogether. Her health has been very greatly improved, and we are all strong advocates of Postum.—Please omit my name from publication."—Flagler, Col. organized and then adjourned as a mark of respect to the memory of the late Vice-President Hobart. The President's message was received on the 5th.

The revolution in Venezuela, under General Hernandez, is reported to be gaining ground from day to day. It is supported by the leading members of the commercial and financial world, who supply the revolutionists with all the arms and money they need. The tenure of Castro's office as president appears to be on a very insecure foundation. The president's army is under the command of a negro named Benjamin Ruiz, a Colombian, on whose head a price was put by the American Government at the time of the burning of Colon, in 1885.

The United States Consul at Pretoria, Charles E. Macrum, having found his conduct of the office distasteful to the Boers, has resigned the position and will be succeeded by Adelbert F. Hay, son of Secretary Hay. Consul Macrum incurred the enmity of the Boers, it appears, because in the exercise of international courtesy he undertook to look after the interests of British residents. It is interesting to note that Secretary Hay, while acting as ambassador to England, made himself very popular in that country, and the fact that his son has been chosen to represent the United States in Pretoria is hailed with much evident satisfaction by Englishmen generally.

Lord Mayor Tallon, of Dublin, after paying a short visit to this country, returned, last week, to his home in Ireland. He took with him $30,000, collected for the fund to commemorate Parnell, the Irish leader.

The National Export Exposition, in Philadelphia, closed on the 2d. It is said that it will yield a profit of $100,000, and will be able to reimburse those who subscribed to meet a possible deficit. It is generally regarded to have been an important factor in encouraging trade. The total attendance exceeded a million and a half.

Owing to the phenomenal sale of the newspapers consequent upon the African war, a paper famine is threatened in London. It is reported that the American supply has failed temporarily, and the advance in the price of wood and coal in England and France is proving an important factor in the increased cost of paper in those countries. In the United States the price of paper has been steadily advancing for several months, and it is likely to continue to advance for some time. Manufacturers and consumers state that an unusual quantity of paper is being used throughout the country.

"The Franklin Syndicate," a concern in Brooklyn which advertised 10 per cent. weekly dividends to all its depositors, has recently collapsed. An immense number of poor people were induced to invest in this bubble, and, as they might have foreseen, were grievously disappointed. The actual stampede to place money in the Syndicate is almost incomprehensible. On the last day before the Syndicate was closed it is said that the receipts amounted to $15,000. A plausibility of honesty was maintained for some time by paying dividends out of deposits received from the gullible investors.

SOCIABLE.

Some of the sentimental considerations that may influence an elector are suggested in this anecdote from a new book, "Irish Life and Character."

A political candidate, on paying a second visit to the house of a doubtful voter of the peasant class, was very pleased, but somewhat surprised, on hearing from the elector that he would support him.

"Glad to hear it," said the candidate. "I thought you were against me."

"Sure. I was at first," rejoined the peasant. "Whin the other day ye called here, and stood by that pigsty, and talked for half an hour, ye didn't budge me an inch."

"But after ye had gone away, sor, I got to thinkin' how ye'd reached yer hand over the rail and scratched the pig's back till he lay down wid the pleasure of it. I made up me mind thin that whin a man was so sociable as that wid a poor fellow-crathure, I wasn't the bhoy to vote agin him."

HOLDING THE GATE OPEN.

No better description of prayer can be found than in Macdonald's words about old Janet in "Sir Gibbie": "She never said she prayed; she held the gate open." For the deepest prayer is not found in our words to God; it is rather the keeping the soul open to Him that He may speak to us.

CHURCHES THAT OWNED DIVES.

In the memory of men not yet old, says Jacob A. Riis, in the December "Atlantic," one church, moving uptown away from the crowd, left its old Mulberry Street home to be converted into tenements that justly earned the name of "dens of death" in the Health Department's records, while another became the foulest lodging-house in an unclean city. It was a church corporation which in those bad days owned the worst underground dive downtown, and turned a deaf ear to all remonstrances. The church was angling for souls. But souls in this world live in bodies endowed with reason. The results of that kind of fishing were empty pews and cold hearts, and the conscience-stricken cry that went up, "What shall we do to lay hold of this great multitude that has slipped from us?"

The modern divinity school is not up to date, says Alfred Brown, Layman, in the December "Atlantic." It is out of step with the age. It is still teaching theology, Hebrew and Greek, church history, homiletics, elocution, and here and there sociology. Strangely enough, it overlooks the most conspicuous and most urgent demand of our time. What is needed is a brand-new chair: call it a Chair of Tent-Making, for that is Pauline.

The need is especially apparent in the Baptist and Congregationalist bodies, but even Presbyterianism and Episcopacy would hail the new era here proposed. Unrest is everywhere: fickleness, insincerity, criticism, short pastorates. Men now living easily remember the days when a pastorate was accounted a life position, and when, in a New England Congregational Church, three pastorates might span a century. In some of the leading denominations, three years is now counted as about the average term of a pastorate. . . . Thus, at the end of the century, there is an ominous combination of causes working to the weakening of the moral fibre of the ministry and to the deterioration of the

THE TUNE THE COW DIED OF.

In Scotland and the North of Ireland, and in some parts of our own country, the phrase, "the tune the cow died on," is common in the mouths of the people. The saying originated in this old song:

"There was an old man, and he had an old cow,
And he had nothing to give her;
So he took out his fiddle and played her a tune—
Consequer, good cow, consider;
This is no time of the year for the grass to grow—
Consider, good cow, consider."

The old cow died of hunger, and when any grotesquely melancholy tune or song is uttered, the North country people say: "That is the tune the cow died of."—"Christian Endeavor World."

A LIVING SAVIOUR.

Because Christ died, we rest in Him and what He does. And every man may find that his hope will not be put to shame. "Saw ye Him" dying? Ah, men, saw ye Him living? It is not the Christ on the cross who saves us, but it is the Christ who was on the cross, and is now alive again forevermore! "Him hath God exalted with His right hand to be a Prince and a Saviour, for to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins." We believe in the living Saviour. I do not know where you men begin your faith; I know where I begin mine. I begin at the resurrection; I say, Was Christ raised from the dead? That he was. Then His life is not an ordinary life, and His death is not an ordinary death. If He was, then He is a living Saviour, able and ready to save me and every man that comes to Him. He is no longer dead. brick was somewhat curved and had been baked, but was of such crude form that it evidently had neither been put in a press nor moulded. The marks of the maker were simply the imprint of the thumb. It was clearly made very soon after the discovery of the art of brick-making, which art, as is universally admitted, marks the dawn of civilization. Other bricks of a much more recent date were shown. Some of them bore the mark of the coat of arms of Sirpulo, an eagle with the head of a lion. Others again were inscribed with the name of the reigning monarch.—From Stone.

A CHRISTMAS RECITATION FOR A CHILD.

Did you ever see old Santa Claus?
Last Christmas night I did.
I went to bed real early,
And then my eyes I hid,

For I really meant to stay awake;
But soon I fell asleep,
And in the night I heard a noise,
And thought I'd take a peep.

For I heard papers rustling soft,
And voices speaking low,
And wondered much who it could be
With Santa Claus, you know.

Was there two of him? Or was he Obliged to have assistance,
Because he had so many things
To bring from such a distance.

So then my eyes I opened wide,—
And there I saw my mother!
For she was one old Santa Claus,
And papa was the other.
—Mary Wood-Allen, in "New Crusade."

A TANGIBLE ANSWER.

Two men in New York were discussing the utility of prayer, and one of them shocked the other by remarking that he did not believe God paid any attention to individual prayers. His friend said: "I am just going to the Fulton Street noon prayer meeting. Come with me, and you are pretty sure to hear something in the way of testimony that may cause you to change your opinion."

The invitation was accepted. There was nothing remarkable in the service until a plain, quiet, elderly gentleman rose. He said: "I wish to mention a very brief incident for the encouragement of others. I set out his morning to make some purchases for a sick man. On my way I was called into a miserable tenement house to see a woman who was absolutely without food and fuel. I could not leave her destitute, so I spent the only five dollars I had in relieving her, and asked God to replace it, so that I might keep my promise to my other friend. I did not tell a soul about it. As I entered this room half an hour ago, a friend (there he sits) put this five-dollar bill into my hand to be used in the Lord's work. This (holding up the bill) is what I call a tangible answer to prayer."

SUBSCRIBERS' WANTS.

This department of "Subscribers' Wants" will be found of value by anyone wishing to reach the Friends with a small advertisement. It has already done excellent service for those who have used it. The varied character of the notices shows that its value is confined to no particular class of "want" advertising, but that it may be used with advantage by all who have anything to advertise. Five lines, one time, cost only 25 cents; additional lines 5 cents each. Extra insertions at the same rate.

BOARDING.—Persons visiting Washington can obtain good accommodations in private house.
Convenient, by electric cars, to all parts of the city.
Rates reasonable. Laura N. Wilson, 1456 Corcoran Street, Washington, D. C.

QUAKERS AS MAKERS OF AMERICA.—
This booklet has proved very popular, and has had a wide sale. Our second edition is now nearly exhausted. So long as the booklets last they will be sold as heretofore for 10 cents the copy, postage paid.

WE CAN still supply our readers with Spurgeon's Address on George Fox for 10 cents per copy, postage paid. This address on the founder of Friends is by all odds the most eulogistic and pleasing ever delivered by anyone outside the denomination.
THE AMERICAN FRIEND, 718 Arch St., Phila.

WANTED.—Anyone with anything to advertise to send us 25 cents for an insertion of a five-line advertisement in this column telling Friends what it is. Fifty cents for two insertions, 75 cents for three, $1.00 for four. Extra lines above five, 5 cents each. Special rates for the quarter year, half year and year, furnished on application.
THE AMERICAN FRIEND, 718 Arch St., Phila.

FOR SALE.—I have a very desirable property of twenty acres in the east side of Wilmington.
Splendid orchard. Thirteen inch wall, brick house, slate roof, stone foundation, seven rooms, large doors and windows, large rooms, most excellent well of water cistern, new barn, good land. Fine for poultry farm, fruit garden, or home for family who want the advantages of a location near a Friends' College, and to live near the great center of Friends in Ohio. Mrs. W. G. Irvin, Wilmington, Ohio.

SEND 4 cents in stamps for "Enterprising Housekeeper." Enterprise Manufacturing Co., Third and Dauphin Streets, Philadelphia, Pa.

AGENTS Wanted everywhere to handle, as a side line or exclusively, oils and greases. Experience unnecessary. Liberal pay. Address Improvement Oil Co., 1263 Cedar Ave., Cleveland, Ohio.

BOOKS FOR MOTHERS.—"Child Culture," by Hannah Whitall Smith. 30 cents. "Studies in Home and Child Life," by Mrs. S. M. I. Henry.
$1.00. "Child Culture in the Home," by Martha B.
Mosher. $1.00. By mail on receipt of price. Circulars free. A. & R. Simms, 123 22d St., Chicago.

Practical Christianity

By RUFUS M. JONES, Litt.D.

This is a collection of short, practical articles on important religious subjects.
It deals with questions which every thinking man must meet in a practical way, and it contains a positive message for the times. In these fifty-three essays many of the most important phases of the spiritual life receive consideration, and the notes of hope and victory, and faith in the overcoming life, are everywhere manifest. It is a book which should appeal to all classes of Christians. The book also contains a suggestive chapter on "The Message of Quakerism."

12mo. 208 pages. Oxford laid paper. Bound in silk cloth, gilt top.
Price, $1.00, postpaid.

THE STORY OF PATRICK MULLEN.

Patrick Mullen was an honest blacksmith, says Jacob A. Riis, in the December "Atlantic." He made guns for a living. He made them so well that one with his name on it was worth a good deal more than the market price of guns. Other makers went to him with offers of money for the use of his stamp; but they never went twice. When sometimes a gun of very superior make was brought to him to finish he would stamp it P. Mullen, never Patrick Mullen. Only to that which he himself had wrought he gave his honest name without reserve. When he died, judges and bishops and other great men crowded to his modest home by the East River, and wrote letters to the newspapers, telling how proud they had been to call him friend. Yet he was, and remained to the end, plain Patrick Mullen, blacksmith and gunmaker.

In his life he supplied the answer to the sigh of dreamers in all days: When will the millennium come? It will come when every man is a Patrick Mullen at his own trade; not merely a P. Mullen, but a Patrick Mullen. The millennium of municipal politics, when there shall be no slum to fight, will come when every citizen does his whole duty as a citizen, not before. As long as he "despises politics," and deputizes another to do it for him, whether that other wears the stamp of a Croker or of a Platt, it matters little which, we shall have the slum, and be put periodically to the trouble and the shame of draining it in the public sight. A citizen's duty is one thing that cannot be farmed out safely; and the slum is not limited by the rookeries of Mulberry or Ludlow Street. It has long roots that feed on the selfishness and dullness of Fifth Avenue quite as greedily as on the squalor of the Sixth Ward. The two are not nearly so far apart as they look.

YOU would like the lamp-chimneys that do not amuse themselves by popping at inconvenient times, wouldn't you?

A chimney ought not to break any more than a tumbler. A tumbler breaks when it tumbles.

Macbeth's "pearl top" and "pearl glass"—they don't break from heat, not one in a hundred; a chimney lasts for years sometimes.

Our "Index" describes all lamps and their proper chimneys. With it you can always order the right size and shape of chimney for any lamp. We mail it FREE to any one who writes for it.

THE LIFE TO BE.

*We shape ourselves the joy or fear
Of which the coming life is made,
And fill our Future's atmosphere
With sunshine or with shade.*

*The tissue of the life to be
We weave with colors all our own,
And in the field of Destiny
We reap as we have sown.*

*Still shall the soul around it call
The shadows which it gathered here
And painted on the eternal wall,
The Past shall reappear.*

*Think ye the notes of holy song
On Milton's tuneful ear have died?
Think ye that Raphael's angel throng
Has vanished from his side?*

*Oh no!—we live our lives again;
Or warmly touched or coldly dim,
The pictures of the Past remain—
Man's works shall follow him!*

Behold the Infant wrapt in swaddling clothes and in a manger lying;

Angels attending watch the first faint breath
That marks the dawning of a day most glorious,
Whose evening we call death.

A look of scorn, perchance of pity, from the multitude awaits him,
While all unconscious pass the gathering throng,
Who, at the Temple's altar sadly praying,
Repeat the wail, "How long?"

"How long, O Lord?" Wilt Thou not yet, e'en as of old, remember Zion?

Come with Thy glittering sword. Thine arm make bare.
Thus, all unconscious of the glory round them,
Their wail dies to despair.

Yet He had come. The King of Kings, that He might be to all a Saviour, Stoops from the Throne to lowliest of birth,

And songs break forth announcing as His mission,
Not war, but "Peace on earth."

How often still we turn aside in scorn from Love's divine evangel
And think by power to crush earth's mightiest wrong,
Till in the hopeless battle sadly fainting,
We miss the angel's song.

Still may thy love, O Lord, in human hearts and hands become incarnate;

Sing on, Thou angel of the coming day,
Give us the eyes to see Thee in Thy coming,
Nor faint at Thy delay.

THE PROPOSED UNIFORM DISCIPLINE FOR FRIENDS IN AMERICA.

THE Conference held at Indianapolis, in 1897, after very weighty consideration of the subject, concluded to appoint a committee to formulate a plan for the closer union of the American Yearly Meetings, and "to prepare a Discipline for submission to the yearly meetings for their approval." A committee of twenty-six Friends was chosen—two from each of the thirteen yearly meetings represented—and this committee selected two of its number to formulate the plan of union and prepare the draft of Discipline. The task imposed was a most difficult one and one requiring a vast amount of thought and labor.

Subscribers in Great Britain and Ireland may remit to our agents, Headley Brothers, 14 Bishopsgate Street, Without, London, E. C., England, or directly to this office. Subscriptions and postage, 10s. Payable in advance.

Advertisements, notices and changes of address, should reach the office not later than Seventh-day noon, for the number of the succeeding week. Remittances and letters on business should be addressed to THE AMERICAN FRIEND, 718 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Checks, Money Orders and Postal Notes should be drawn to the order of THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

The first draft was, at length, prepared and submitted to the entire committee during the summer, and the freest and fullest criticism invited. Copies were also sent to a few other Friends, whose judgment and counsel were asked. Most helpful suggestions were received, and in such abundance that the sub-committee experienced almost an embarrassment of riches. Every suggestion was carefully considered, and the first draft was greatly transformed as a result. The second draft was then sent out for further criticism, and a second time an abundance of valuable suggestion was received. The whole work has been entirely gone over again in the light of these suggestions, and after careful labor this present draft has been produced.

It is now printed in THE AMERICAN FRIEND, so that every Friend in America, who desires to do so, may see it and study it and criticise it before it goes to the yearly meetings for action.

It is impossible to speak too emphatically of the broad way in which the members of the large committee and the other Friends who have seen it have treated the work. Their criticisms have almost invariably shown deep and careful study, and, instead of narrow and carping criticism, the suggestions have, in almost every case, been wise and far-reaching and in a generous spirit. There has been no attempt or desire indicated to give undue prominence to the peculiarities of one section of country over those of another, or of one trend of thought and practice over that of another. In fact, the members from the largest yearly meetings have shown a most commendable zeal to safeguard the interests of the small yearly meetings, and not the slightest indication of a disposition to take advantage in any direction has appeared. It is to be doubted if so large a number of Friends, widely separated and with different views, ever worked together in a more harmonious and generous spirit. It is to be hoped that this same spirit may continue in the work which still remains to be done. Every Friend ought to study this document and act upon it intelligently. All suggestions and criticisms in detail should be sent to the chairman of the committee.* It is further hoped that the publication of this draft may call forth a more extended consideration of it in a general way in THE AMERICAN FRIEND, and the editor invites articles upon the subject from Friends everywhere.

All who read it and study it are reminded that it is prepared for Friends on this whole continent, and it must be considered with this in mind. The reader of it, as the makers of it have done, must rise above a mere local point of view. The supreme question ought to be, What is best for this branch of the Church under present existing conditions?

It will be noticed at once that this Discipline is quite unlike the ancient disciplines with which many of us have grown familiar. It has little historical matter in it—only a short preface—and no advices. The statement of belief, though brief and concise, includes everything fundamental in the Christian religion as Friends interpret it, and it can quickly be read and grasped by everybody; whereas a long argumentative statement would receive, as has been clearly proved in the past, little attention. The reference to the Richmond Declaration is intended to meet all requirements for a fuller statement.

The preparative meeting is discarded, and a plan provided which it is believed will be vastly more adequate for the needs of the separate congregations. Every effort has been made to get rid, in all the meetings, of useless machinery and formal, perfunctory exercises and practices, and to make for life and power. Three meetings have received new names. The preparative meeting on ministry and oversight is here called the Local Meeting on Ministry and Oversight. The representative meeting is here called the Permanent Board of the Yearly Meeting, the reason for which is clearly given in the Discipline itself. The Quinquennial Conference is here called The Five Years' Meeting. This Five Years' Meeting now becomes a regular part—the capstone—in the whole system of meetings. It is to be a meeting rather than a conference, and its constitution and business are clearly marked out in this Discipline, making it a most important body in the work of the church.

*James Wood, Mount Kisco, N. Y.

Those who have worked at this large undertaking have realized that a new era has come, that we must front the future, though we duly appreciate and study the past, and that new occasions must be met and dealt with. The work has been carried on under a profound sense of its importance—with single eye and prayerful heart. It should still be improved in every possible way, and then the yearly meetings may be trusted to act rightly for the future interests of our church.

AN HISTORICAL SKETCH OF THE "DISCIPLINE" AMONG FRIENDS.*

THE organization of this branch of the Church is unique. Its system of meetings, its manner of conducting meetings, of overseeing and disciplining the membership, its queries, its epistles, its curious minute books, are all peculiar to itself alone. The origin and historical development of the organization and its Discipline need much more careful study than they have yet received; but at the present time we can hardly do more than gather up a few important facts.

Probably no religious body—hardly the apostolic church itself—ever had less organization and rigid system, less that was fixed and definite, than the Society of Friends in its early years. It was a great company of men and women bound together by mutual love and sympathy, working under the sense of a Divine Presence directing them, and trusting confidently in the wisdom of the most spiritual among them, especially in the wisdom and judgment of George Fox.

As in the apostolic church, the first officers were chosen to provide for the necessities of the poor, so, too, the needs and straits of those who were suffering from imprisonment or loss of goods were the first ground for business meetings of Friends. No meeting in our history bears a more significant name than the "Meeting for Sufferings." It was customary from a very early period to hold what were called "General Meetings," which seem to have been occasional gatherings of Friends in great numbers—often reaching thousands. They were times primarily for worship and preaching, but they were also for the purpose of considering "the affairs of the church," and for attending to the needs of the poor, as Fox distinctly states.

As a rule, the quarterly meeting preceded in organization the monthly meeting, but during the years 1667 and 1668, Fox, who had been for almost three years "buried alive" in prison, and who now saw the sad results of the want of system and order, labored diligently by his presence and by his letters in the work of setting up monthly meetings in Great Britain, Ireland, Holland, Barbadoes, and in parts of America. There was a growing need of system in caring for the poor and the suffering, for disciplining those who walked unworthily, for formulating Friends' position and seeking redress from the government for unjust and illegal treatment. Before the death of Fox, in 1690, the system of meetings was complete, from the yearly meeting down to the preparative, or local, meeting, though this organization was accomplished in the face of serious and stubborn opposition on the part of those who pleaded for absolute freedom under the Spirit.

George Fox's epistles of advice to the meetings were generally received as authoritative documents, and served in place of a Discipline. One particular set of advices—probably written by Fox—sent to "Friends in all their men's meetings," in 1668, were adopted by nearly all the meetings, both in Great Britain and America, and these advices—nineteen in number—served for nearly three-quarters of a century the purposes of a Discipline.

No book of Discipline was adopted in England until 1738, and then it was only in manuscript form.

The yearly meetings in America adopted rules of Discipline and "of good order" in the early years of last century—Virginia Yearly Meeting in 1702, Philadelphia in 1707, and New England in 1708.

We have before us a copy of the record of the yearly meeting setting forth this first Discipline of New England, which may probably be taken as a sample of all those adopted at the time. It contains twenty articles bearing particularly upon the regulation of "walk and conversation," dress, attendance and behavior at places of worship, business morality and marriage procedure. The purpose of the articles is "that Zion may shine and become the beauty of nations and the praise of the whole earth."

It is astonishing how much space is devoted to the details of plainness and how little to the great spiritual facts and principles. For example: "Let all Friends keep to plainness in their household stuff and furniture, both bedding and otherwise, avoiding in particular striped and flowered beds, or window hangings of divers colors, and quilts, counterpanes and table carpets of like gaudy colors, and double valances and fringes, and that side-saddles and others be plain without fringes, and bridles without needless buckles and bosses."

"Friends having silver vessels are cautioned not to set them in public places." Friends are advised against committing disorders at marriages by "eating, drinking and smoking tobacco to excess, tending to the reproach of truth and trouble of Friends."

They are warned not to wear "the neckcloth long hanging down, or twisted through the buttonholes, nor big, superfluous buttons, nor big buttonholes, nor cross pockets, nor unsuitable linings of gaudy colors, nor big, unbecoming shoe buckles." Friends are urged on all occasions, and especially at funerals, "to avoid the unnecessary use of tobacco."

They are exhorted not to regard "feast days (called Thanksgivings) or fast days for pretended humiliation." Friends are "not to shut their shop windows, or any part of them," on such days.

Great stress is laid on the importance of dealing with such as are "not conformable to good order."

Most, if not all, the American yearly meetings adopted a "book of Discipline" between the years 1758 and 1762. New York, at this latter date, adopted Philadelphia's book of Discipline, but no yearly meeting in the world appears to have printed its Discipline prior to 1783, which is the date of the First Edition of London Discipline. New England followed two years later with a printed Discipline based on that of London, and the other yearly meetings soon after took a similar course. Answers to queries seem not to have been required until after the middle of last century, and in the Baltimore Discipline of 1759 there were no queries, though Virginia Yearly Meeting adopted seventeen queries in 1722. In 1805 Philadelphia Yearly Meeting appointed a committee to correspond with New York and New England Yearly Meetings to bring about a uniform Discipline. The proposal was well considered in New England, but was not encouraged in New York, and nothing definite seems to have come of it.

It was long the custom to regard the book of Discipline as too sacred for ordinary or general use. In Philadelphia, until 1825, the Disciplines were kept in meeting houses under charge of the overseers, and hardly known at all by the individual members. During the present century there have been many editions, in the various yearly meetings, of the Discipline, which we cannot mention in detail. Until recent years most of the American Disciplines were very similar in matter and form, each new one being largely based on a former one. The Iowa Discipline of 1892, and California Discipline of 1898, are exceptions, both being, though entirely unlike, original and modern in their plan and structure.

The trees along wisdom's way are question marks.

DRAFT OF THE PROPOSED Constitution and Discipline

FOR THE AMERICAN YEARLY MEETINGS OF FRIENDS

PREFACE.

The Society of Friends arose in England about the middle of the seventeenth century. George Fox began his ministry in 1647. The position of the Friends was the logical conclusion of the Protestant Reformation, and marked the culmination in the development of doctrine which had been advancing by irregular stages for more than a century. They proclaimed the truth that man's salvation was a personal matter between his own soul and God, and did not depend upon the intervention of the Church in any of its offices, or by any of its officers, in the administration of any rite, ordinance or ceremony whatever. They accepted the doctrines of the apostolic age of the Church, and distinctively emphasized the truth that the Holy Spirit enlightens every soul to reveal its condition and make the individual feel the need of a Saviour. They emphasized the further truth that Christ's promise to plant a new life in the soul and abide there to give it light, to feed it with the bread of life and to lead it into all truth, had become a practical reality to be known and experienced by every true believer. They proclaimed that the true baptism is that of Christ Himself, who baptizes His people with the Holy Spirit, and that the true communion is the spiritual partaking of the body and blood of Jesus Christ by faith, and that there is no form or degree of sacerdotalism in the Christian Church.

This clear and ringing message as to the freedom and the spirituality of the Gospel attracted multitudes of people who had sought the truth in the endless disputations of the time. The Society was organized with a great number of adherents. They took the title of Society because it was considered that the term Church belonged to the whole body of Christ, and that no portion of that body had a right to assume to itself a name that implied any exclusion of others. The name Friends was taken in accordance with the declaration of the Master: "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you." For a time the members called themselves the "Friends of Truth."

The distinguishing doctrines of Friends have from the beginning led them into special lines of service that have resulted in great good to mankind. Because they would not comply with improper usages they were imprisoned in great numbers in England until their quiet endurance of oppression aroused the conscience of the nation, and this resulted in obtaining many of the blessings of civil and religious liberty which all their fellow citizens now enjoy. They were the consistent and unyielding opponents of human slavery when they stood almost alone in their opposition to it. They have opposed war as violating the principles and precepts of Christianity and as bringing untold evils upon mankind, and they have always advocated peaceable methods of settling all disputes between nations. They have steadily advocated justice toward the North American Indian, and have labored independently and as the representatives of government, for his civilization and christianization. They believe that oaths were forbidden by Christ, and they have obtained in all English-speaking countries the privilege of affirmation. They have advocated, and in many cases inaugurated, prison reform, which has greatly relieved the sufferings of convicts. They have been among the leaders in the rational and Christian treatment of the insane; and, in many other ways, have performed the service they felt laid upon them for the good of humanity.

Friends came to America soon after the rise of the Society in England. New England Yearly Meeting was established in 1671, or earlier; Baltimore in 1672, Virginia, 1673, and joined to Baltimore in 1845; Philadelphia in 1681, New York in 1695, North Carolina in 1708, Ohio in 1812, Indiana in 1821, Western in 1857, Iowa in 1863, Canada in 1867, Kansas in 1872, Wilmington in 1892, Oregon in 1893, California in 1895.

Conferences to consider special situations were held in Philadelphia in 1829, and in Baltimore in 1852.

The first General Conference of the Yearly Meetings was held at Richmond, Indiana, in 1887, and was attended by delegates from London and Dublin Yearly Meetings, and from all those on the American continent, except that of Philadelphia, which was unofficially represented. It was afterwards decided to hold similar conferences of the American Yearly Meetings once in five years. They have been held at Indianapolis, Indiana, in 1892 and 1897. At the latter conference it was felt that a closer union of the Yearly Meetings and a uniform discipline would be desirable. A committee was appointed for this purpose and this Constitution and Discipline was prepared.

Part I.

The Church and Its Denominations.

CHAPTER I.

SECTION 1.—THE CHURCH.

1. The Church of Jesus Christ is composed of those persons who, through repentance of their sins and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour, have been born into His kingdom by the Holy Spirit who enters their souls and implants spiritual life therein. By the revelation of the Holy Spirit they look to Christ as their Prophet, Priest and King, and, by the Spirit's baptism and power, are enabled to resist temptation and to live in obedience to God's holy will.

2. A Christian denomination is an organization composed of those who hold similar views of the teachings of the Holy Scriptures, and maintain certain practices based upon these teachings, and who voluntarily associate themselves together for joint participation in worship, for fellowship and mutual help, and for united effort in the promotion of truth and righteousness. The denomination of The Friends is such a Christian body.

3. Each denominational body has its own system of government, and rules for the transaction of its business and for the individual observance of its members.

SECTION 2.—THE FRIENDS.

1. The Friends recognize and emphasize the fundamental and essential truth that Jesus Christ is the Head of His Church upon the earth; that He dwells in the hearts of His believers by the Holy Spirit; that, as they look for His guidance, their understandings are enlightened and they are enabled to do His will. Associated with this is the further truth that the Head of the Church is pleased to confer upon each believer some especial gift or gifts which he is to exercise with such ability as may be possessed. Members have equal rights and privileges in the denomination, modified only by the gifts they have received and their faithfulness in the exercise thereof. It is therefore both theocratic and democratic in the principle of its government.

2. Positions in the organization relating to spiritual matters result from the official recognition by the body of these gifts rather than from appointment to office. Appointments are made to other positions. Each member has duties to perform and responsibilities to meet, and the business of the organization is conducted in recognition of this equality of rank in the membership, with the further recognition of the special gifts.

3. There are no distinctions in the rights, privileges or responsibilities of the members because of sex.

4. The business of the organization is conducted through meetings, in which every member of the body has a right to participate. These meetings, in some instances, delegate authority in certain matters to other meetings composed of those who occupy specified positions or who have been appointed for the special service.

SECTION 3.—BELIEF.

1. The vital principle of the Christian faith is the truth that man's salvation and higher life are personal matters between the individual soul and God. Salvation is wrought by the direct work of the living Christ, our Saviour, who visits all hearts by His Spirit. He brings the souls, that yield to Him, into newness of life. A changed nature and life bear witness to this new relation to Him. When man is brought into conviction for sin by the gracious operation of the Holy Spirit, and is willing to give himself to Christ as his only hope of salvation, he becomes reconciled to God; then the Holy Spirit implants His life in the soul without the agency of any human priest, or ordinance or ceremony whatsoever. The whole spiritual life springs immediately from Christ; not from any external order of things. He Himself baptizes the regenerated soul with the Holy Spirit, enduing it with power and bestowing gifts for service. This is an efficient baptism, a direct incoming of divine forces for the transformation and control of the whole man. He Himself is the spiritual bread which feeds the soul and He enters into a communion with it which needs no symbol to represent its reality, for the soul thrills with life as it communes with its risen Lord. He is His own best evidence to the consciousness which responds to Him. This intimate relation established between the recreated soul and its Lord makes true worship possible and gives to it its value. He moves upon the heart by His Spirit and listens with approval to the expressions of love and homage which ascend from those who worship in spirit and in truth.

The Holy Scriptures, given by inspiration of God, are the only divinely authorized record of the doctrines which Christians are bound to accept, and of the moral principles which are to regulate their actions. In them, as interpreted and unfolded by the Holy Spirit, is an ever fresh and unfailing source of spiritual truth for the proper guidance of life and practice.

The great doctrines of the apostolic days are held by Friends as essentials of Christianity. The Fatherhood of God; the Deity of the Son; the gift of the Holy Spirit; the atonement of Jesus Christ by which men are reconciled to God; the Resurrection; the Highpriesthood of Christ, and the individual priesthood of believers, are most precious truths to be held, not as traditional dogmas, but as vital, life-giving realities.

The sinful condition of man and his proneness to yield to temptation, the world's absolute need of God and a knowledge of the power of God unto salvation, and the cleansing from sin in forgiveness and sanctification through the blood of Jesus Christ, are unceasing incentives to all, who believe, to become co-laborers with God in extending His kingdom. By this high calling, Friends are pledged to the proclamation of the truth wherever the Spirit leads, both in home and in foreign fields.

The indwelling Spirit sways and controls the surrendered life, and the Christian's constant and supreme business is obedience to Him. But, while the importance of individual guidance and obedience is thus emphasized, this fact gives no ground for license; the sanctified conclusions of the Church are above the judgment of a single individual.

There is no scriptural evidence or authority for any form or degree of sacerdotalism in the Christian Church, or for the establishment of any ordinance or ceremonial rite for perpetual observance. The teachings of Jesus Christ concerning the spiritual nature of religion, the impossibility of promoting the spiritual life by the application of material things, the fact that faith in Jesus Christ Himself is all-sufficient, and the purpose of His life, death, resurrection and ascension, and His spiritual presence in the believer's heart, virtually destroy every ceremonial system and point the soul to the only satisfying source of spiritual life and power.

With faith in the wisdom of Almighty God, the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit, and believing that it is His purpose to make His Church on earth a power for righteousness and truth, Friends labor for the alleviation of human suffering; for the intellectual, moral and spiritual elevation of mankind; and for purified and exalted citizenship. Friends believe war to be inconsistent with Christianity, and seek to promote peaceful methods for the settlement of all differences between nations and men.

It is an essential part of the faith that a man should be in truth what he professes in word, and the underlying principle of life and action for individuals, and also for society, is transformation through the power of God and implicit obedience to His revealed will.

For more explicit and extended statements of belief, reference is made to those officially put forth at various times, especially to the letter of George Fox to the Governor of Barbadoes in 1671, and to the "Declaration of Faith," issued by the Richmond Conference in 1887.

SECTION 4.—WORSHIP.

1. It is the duty and the privilege of believers to meet together for the public worship of God. In doing this they each time make a public profession to the world of their faith in Christ, and avail themselves of opportunities for spiritual blessing and mutual helpfulness not otherwise offered.

Worship is the highest act of which the human consciousness is capable, and it can be truly performed only as it is in response to the influence of the Spirit of God. Public worship is based upon the declaration of our Lord, that "where two or three are met together in My name, there am I in the midst of them." The congregation is thus "the congregation of the Lord," and the meeting is, primarily, with Him. He touches the spiritual consciousness of believers, and thus, through Him, their High Priest and Intercessor, they are enabled to worship the Father in spirit and in truth. Worship stands neither in forms nor in the formal disuse of forms; it may be without words as well as with them. The value of silence is recognized, not as an end, but as a means toward the attainment of an end, which is the divine blessing upon the individual and the congregation; a silence not of listlessness or of vacant musing, but of holy expectation before the Lord.

As Master of the Assembly, the Lord directs and leads the profitable exercises of His congregation. He calls and qualifies whom He will to be the bearer of His message, and each individual believer should hold himself in obedient submission to His will. The occasions of public worship are divinely appointed for the proclamation of fresh and vital messages of salvation to the world, and for the edification of believers in the truth.

CHAPTER II.

SPIRITUAL GIFTS.

1. It has pleased the Head of the Church to make use of human instrumentalities in the accomplishment of His purposes; to this end He continues to bestow special gifts upon certain members of the body, for the propagation of the gospel; for the perfecting of individual believers; and for the edifying and strengthening of the whole body in faith and life and power. The exercise of these gifts is a potent means through which the Church brings the truth to the individual consciousness, interprets and proclaims its message, and reveals its scope and purpose. There are varieties of gifts in the ministry, and in a properly organized religious body provision is made for the exercise and development of all these gifts. It is not easy to draw a sharp distinction between the different types of ministry; frequently they are united in one person, who is thus peculiarly qualified for helpful service.

There is a gift for the ministry of instruction and of exposition, or of teaching the truth. Those who possess this gift are enabled to contribute in different degrees to the establishment of the membership, and to the expansion of the individual's conception of Divine things. This ministry of teaching requires a balanced, trained and well-stored mind, and the consecration of that mind to the service of Him who is the Truth.

There is a gift of speaking to states and needs of individuals, and of meetings. This prophetic ministry is characterized by its spiritual vision, the self-evidence of its message and its fitness for the situation. It is a gift of seeing truth immediately, and of the effective teaching of it to others.

There is a gift for exhortation, which is an ability for making an appeal to the hearts of men, and of stirring them to a sense of the love of God and His purposes for man—the power of moving and convicting souls, and those who possess this gift are peculiarly fitted for evangelistic work.

There is also a pastoral gift, which consists especially in ability to do personal work with individuals or with families. This gift fits the possessor of it to comfort those who mourn, to lead the members into a closer religious life, to arouse in the young an interest in the things of the Spirit, and to impress others with a sense of the scope and reality of the spiritual life. It is the gift of shepherding and feeding the flock.

The Church cannot make or appoint ministers; it can only recognize gifts where they exist, and properly provide for their exercise and development as a sacred bestowal of the Head of the Church.

Part II.

Form of Government.

CHAPTER I.

THE DENOMINATION OF THE FRIENDS.

1. The denomination of The Friends is composed of Yearly Meetings, with their subordinate branches, in Great Britain, Ireland, the United States and Canada; and those members who are variously situated in other parts of the world. The bond of union is maintained by annual correspondence between them; by issuing and receiving the credentials of ministers for special service; by granting and receiving certificates of membership in cases of removal; and by joint participation in religious and benevolent enterprises. Each Yearly Meeting is independent in the transaction of its business. Those Yearly Meetings which unite in this Constitution and Discipline, and, under its provisions, delegate certain authority to a specific body, retain their original independence, and, in its exercise, grant the power hereinafter described.

This common discipline shall become operative in those Yearly Meetings approving and adopting it, when it shall have been so approved and adopted by nine of those on the American Continent, or by such number as may represent three-fourths of the Friends in America. Each of these Yearly Meetings retains authority to adopt additional disciplinary regulations not inconsistent herewith.

2. If any Yearly Meeting shall see fit not to adopt this Constitution and Discipline, or if any Yearly Meeting after having adopted it shall see fit to withdraw from its operation, the standing of such meeting or meetings in relation to the Five Years' Meeting, and to its work, shall be determined by that body.

3. This Discipline may be amended upon the approval of the amendments by two-thirds of the Yearly Meetings that have adopted it. Each Yearly Meeting may change the Discipline in the following chapters, viz.: Chapters I, II and III, of Part III, and Chapters II and III, of Part IV, as its local conditions may require.

CHAPTER II.

MEMBERSHIP.

The Friends admit into membership all who make a profession of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, whose lives testify to their connection with Him, and who accept the doctrines of the Gospel as held by Friends. The children of members are also enrolled as members. They are thus recognized, not because their birthright can of itself make them members of the body of Christ, for they can only become such by experiencing the new birth by the Holy Spirit, but because of the promises in the Holy Scriptures to believers and their households and the conviction that true Christians will so make their children the objects of living prayer, and will so instruct them in the Gospel and go with them to the Throne of Grace, that they will surrender their hearts to God in their youth, and early take a natural and living interest in the Church as they do in the family. Persons thus enrolled in childhood as nominal members shall be enrolled as active members of the Church when they shall have made a credible profession of faith in Jesus Christ as their Saviour and Lord, and shall have accepted the doctrines of the Gospel as held by Friends. Where but one parent is a member the children may be enrolled as members upon the request of both parents.

CHAPTER III.

A MEETING.

1. A congregation of members is called a Meeting. It is under the supervision of Ministers and Elders as to its spiritual interests, and of Overseers as to the moral conduct of the members. These are officers of the Monthly Meeting of which the particular meeting forms a part.

The business affairs of a congregation are cared for by the regular officers and by committees appointed by the Monthly Meeting. Monthly Meetings may establish a business meeting for a particular congregation when its local interests make such meeting advisable.

CHAPTER IV.

MEETINGS FOR BUSINESS.

CLERKS.

The Clerk of a business meeting has the care of its business, which he lays before it for consideration and determines what conclusion the meeting reaches. In a meeting for business it should be the chief desire to ascertain what may be the mind of the Lord, and Clerks should be chosen with a special reference to their sound judgment and gift of spiritual discernment, with ability to determine what is the leading of the meeting as indicated by the expression made. Clerks should be familiar with the usages of the denomination and with all its departments of work. The Clerk shall keep a faithful record of the business that has come before the meeting and of the conclusions reached by it, and he shall furnish copies of necessary portions of such records to persons authorized, under the appointment of any superior meeting, to ask for them. He shall sign on the meeting's behalf all official documents put forth by it.

CHAPTER V.

SECTION 1.—MONTHLY MEETINGS.

1. A Monthly Meeting is a regular organization of one or more congregations, and consists of all those persons who are entitled to be recorded upon its list of members. It is charged with the government of the body, according to the Constitution and Discipline, and has authority to receive members; to dismiss them from membership; to discipline offenders; to grant appeals; to consider all questions affecting the membership; to hold and administer real estate and other property for the use of the church; and to adopt and carry out measures for the improvement of the spiritual interests of the body. It meets monthly for the transaction of business; and once in three month it reports, in an abstract of its minutes, such business as should be laid before the Quarterly Meeting of which it forms a part and to which it is subordinate, and to attend which it may appoint two or more representatives.

2. Each active member has a right to participate in the business of the Monthly Meeting.

3. A Monthly Meeting, authorized by a superior meeting, is duly organized for the transaction of business when, upon the nomination of a committee named for this service, it shall appoint a Clerk, who shall have charge of its business.

4. All officers appointed by the meeting shall hold their positions until their successors are appointed.

SECTION 2.—CLERK.

The Clerk of a Monthly Meeting shall forward to the Quarterly Meeting such business as requires its attention, and such abstract of the minutes of the Monthly Meeting as may be necessary. He shall keep (in a book printed for the purpose and provided by the Yearly Meeting) a correct record of the membership, including all births, marriages, deaths and transfers, and he shall annually furnish the Quarterly Meeting such statistical information as the Yearly Meeting may direct, including the recording, deaths and transfers of ministers.

SECTION 3.—MINISTERS AND ELDERS.

1. Ministers and Elders are charged with the oversight and care of the spiritual interests in their various congregations. The choice of these is based upon moral character and the possession of spiritual gifts and qualifications. They are designated for their positions by the Monthly Meeting in the manner prescribed in Chapters VI and VII, Part II.

SECTION 4.—OVERSEERS.

1. The Monthly Meeting shall choose every three years, through the nomination of a committee, two or more faithful and judicious persons for each separate congregation to serve as Overseers. It shall be their duty to exercise a watchful care and affectionate oversight for the maintenance of a consistent moral life in the members of the meeting; to extend care and reproof in all cases of disobedience, disorder, or any conduct unbecoming to a Christian, and to restore, if possible, such offenders to an orderly life and to full fellowship with the meeting.

2. If due care and labor in this direction prove ineffectual, it becomes their duty to enter complaint to the Monthly Meeting against such offenders.

SECTION 5.—TREASURER.

1. Each Monthly Meeting shall annually appoint a Treasurer, who shall receive and disburse funds on behalf of the meeting, keep a regular account of the money so received and paid, and make an annual report to the Monthly Meeting.

SECTION 6.—CORRESPONDENTS.

1. Each Monthly Meeting shall appoint, as succession requires, a Correspondent to authenticate documents issued by it to other meetings. Information of the appointment of Correspondents is to be forwarded to the Yearly Meeting.

SECTION 7.—THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES.

1. Each Monthly Meeting shall appoint three or more of its members to serve as a Board of Trustees. It shall be the duty of the Trustees to hold all real estate, to keep all deeds legally recorded, to guard all property from injury or improper use, to preserve all important records and documents, and to make an annual report to the Monthly Meeting. Where Monthly Meetings are incorporated under State laws their property will necessarily be held and administered in accordance therewith. Yearly Meetings may provide for the holding and transferring of real estate and other property by their own Trustees if they prefer.

SECTION 8.—FINANCE COMMITTEE.

Monthly Meetings shall annually appoint a Finance Committee to superintend the raising and expending of funds, and to provide for the incidental expenses of the Monthly Meeting and its congregations.

SECTION 9.—PASTORAL COMMITTEE.

1. The Ministers, Elders and Overseers of each congregation constitute its Pastoral Committee. The Monthly Meeting may also appoint other members to co-operate with them in this work. See Chapter I, Part III.

SECTION 10.—OTHER COMMITTEES.

Monthly Meetings shall appoint annually such other standing committees to serve the meeting in the interests of the various departments of its work as their needs may require.

SECTION 11.—RECEPTION OF MEMBERS.

1. Application for membership shall be made in writing to the Monthly Meeting through the Pastoral Committee.

2. It shall be the duty of the Pastoral Committee before presenting the name of an applicant for membership to ascertain whether he makes a credible profession of faith in Christ as his Saviour, and accepts the doctrines of the Christian religion as held by Friends; whether his present life indicates the sincerity of his profession, and whether he will conform to the Constitution and Discipline. The judgment of the committee shall be given, together with the application, and the Monthly Meeting shall act according to its best judgment. The Clerk shall inform the applicant of his reception.

3. When a member is thus received the announcement of his reception may be publicly made at the conclusion of a meeting for worship on the First Day of the week when he is present, thus affording an opportunity for other members to extend to him a cordial welcome.

4. Parents or guardians may make application for the enrollment of minor children.

SECTION 12.—RECEPTION BY CERTIFICATE.

1. Monthly Meetings shall issue certificates of membership for such of its members in good standing as may remove to the limits of another Monthly Meeting when the same is requested, or the Monthly Meeting deems it best to do so, and such certificate shall be accepted by the Monthly Meeting to which it is addressed, unless sufficient reason shall appear to the contrary. In every case the Monthly Meeting receiving the certificate shall inform the meeting which issued it of the action taken thereon, and the membership will not be transferred until such notice is received.

2. When an applicant for membership produces a letter of recommendation from another evangelical denomination, Monthly Meetings may exercise their judgment as to receiving him on this recommendation.

3. The acceptance and the issuing of all certificates shall be recorded on the minutes of Monthly Meetings, and the list of members corrected accordingly. Removal certificates for ministers shall include a certificate of this position. Those for Elders and Overseers shall not refer to their official position, which is not transferable.

SECTION 13.—RESIGNATIONS OF MEMBERSHIP.

1. Resignations of membership shall be made to the Monthly Meeting in writing. The Monthly Meeting may exercise its discretion in accepting a resignation.

2. When any member shall have united with another religious body, the Monthly Meeting, on information thereof, shall remove his name from the list of members, and inform him of its action.

3. If a member in good standing wishes to unite with some other evangelical body of Christians, the Monthly Meeting may grant him a letter stating his Christian standing, and his membership with Friends shall cease when information is received by the body addressed.

SECTION 14.—REPORT ON THE STATE OF THE CHURCH.

1. Each Monthly Meeting shall annually report to the Quarterly Meeting preceding the Yearly Meeting upon the spiritual condition of its membership and its meetings, basing its report upon those received from its congregations, and covering the points named in the clause relating thereto.

CHAPTER VI.

SECTION 1.—RECORDING OF MINISTERS.

1. When a member, man or woman, has spoken as a minister [see Gifts in the Ministry] so that the meeting is edified and spiritually helped thereby, the members of the Meeting on Ministry and Oversight are carefully to consider whether he has received from the Head of the Church a gift in the ministry which the meeting ought to recognize. Persons may occasionally speak to edification, or engage in exhortation, or give testimony to their experience, or offer vocal prayer with evidence of spiritual power without having, necessarily, received a special gift in the ministry. When the members of a Local Meeting on Ministry and Oversight are satisfied that a member has received a gift in the ministry, they are to send the information to the Quarterly Meeting on Ministry and Oversight to have him recorded as a minister. Upon receiving such information the said Quarterly Meeting shall appoint a committee to consider the subject; to obtain information as to the evidence of the person having received spiritual gifts; as to his manner of life; his doctrinal views; his mental capacity; and his general qualifications for the ministry. The committee shall report its judgment to the Quarterly Meeting on Ministry and Oversight, and, if it is approved, this meeting shall inform the Monthly Meeting of which the person is a member. The latter meeting shall act in the case according to its judgment. When a minister is recorded by a Monthly Meeting the Clerk shall notify the Secretary of the Evangelistic and Church Extension Board of the Five Years' Meeting, giving the full name and address of the minister.

2. When a Monthly Meeting is informed by the Quarterly Meeting on Ministry and Oversight that in its judgment a minister has lost his gift in the ministry and usefulness in his station, if the judgment be concurred in, his recording as a minister shall be rescinded by the Monthly Meeting.

If the Monthly Meeting declines to act in the case, the Quarterly Meeting on Ministry and Oversight may appeal, through the Yearly Meeting on Ministry and Oversight, to the Yearly Meeting for the exercise of its authority.

SECTION 2.—LIBERATING MINISTERS.

When a minister believes that he is called of God to ministerial service outside his Quarterly Meeting, the following course shall be pursued:

1. If the proposed service lie within the limits of the Yearly Meeting of which he is a member, the minister shall bring the concern before the Monthly Meeting, and request a certificate of its unity and concurrence in the service. The Monthly Meeting may grant the certificate, defining the nature and the field of the service. Special service may be undertaken under the direction of the Evangelistic and Church Extension Committee of the Yearly Meeting without certificate.

2. If the proposed service involves a general visit within his own Yearly Meeting or other American Yearly Meetings, and the Monthly Meeting unites and concurs, it shall transmit a written statement of the nature and field of the proposed service, and of its unity and concurrence therein, to the Quarterly Meeting. If that body also unites and concurs in the service, it shall grant the minister requesting it a certificate for the same, defining the nature and field thereof, and the unity and concurrence therein, of the Monthly Meeting. When, in exceptional cases, time does not permit of the action of the Quarterly Meeting, the certificate of the Monthly Meeting may be forwarded to the Clerk of the Quarterly Meeting, who shall confer with the Clerk of the Quarterly Meeting on Ministry and Oversight, and if they approve of the proposed service they shall endorse the certificate, and such endorsement shall give the necessary authority for the service. These Clerks shall report their action with the attendant circumstances to their respective meetings.

3. If the proposed service lie beyond the limits of the American Yearly Meetings, the Monthly Meeting concurring shall transmit to the Quarterly Meeting, and the Quarterly Meeting to the Yearly Meeting on Ministry and Oversight, and the Yearly Meeting on Ministry and Oversight to the Yearly Meeting, a written statement of the nature and the field of service and their concurrence therein. If the Yearly Meeting also unite and concur in the service it shall grant the minister a suitable certificate therefor, defining the nature and the field thereof and the unity and concurrence therein of each of the meetings which have considered the subject.

When time will not permit the consideration of the Quarterly Meeting's certificate by the Yearly Meeting on Ministry and Oversight and the Yearly Meeting, the certificate shall be forwarded to the Clerk of the Permanent Board of the Yearly Meeting, who shall lay the subject before a regular or a special meeting of that body. The unity with, and approval of, the proposed service by that Board, endorsed upon the certificate of the Quarterly Meeting by the Clerk, and countersigned by the Correspondent of the Yearly Meeting, shall give the necessary authority for entering upon the service.

4. In every case where a certificate for ministerial service is granted, the Clerk and the Correspondent of the meeting finally granting it shall sign the same, and this meeting shall see that the minister is properly provided with means for the accomplishment of the service.

5. When a minister or other worker in any Yearly Meeting desires to engage in special pastoral or evangelistic service within the limits of another Yearly Meeting, he shall lay the matter before his Monthly Meeting as for other service. If that meeting grants him a certificate, he shall submit it to the Evangelistic and Church Extension Committee of his own Yearly Meeting; if, after due consideration by the committee, his standing and qualifications appear to offer no hindrance to his entering upon the proposed service, the committee is to furnish him with a written statement to this effect. In the performance of this service he shall work in harmony with the constituted authorities for such labor in the Yearly Meeting where his service is performed.

Where the service shall continue for a longer period than one year, the minister should apply to his Monthly Meeting for a certificate transferring his membership to the Monthly Meeting within which his service is located.

6. When any minister has been engaged in pastoral or evangelistic service in any locality, and the Local Meeting on Ministry and Oversight becomes satisfied that his services are no longer profitable, it shall officially notify the Monthly Meeting of its judgment, and that meeting shall act as it may deem best. If it concurs with the judgment the minister shall discontinue all service in the locality where he has been engaged.

7. All certificates for ministerial service shall, after the performance of the labor, be seasonably returned to the meeting or meetings that granted them.

CHAPTER VII.

THE APPOINTMENT OF ELDERS.

1. Monthly Meetings shall appoint committees every three years to propose for the station of Elder persons who, in their judgment, possess the proper gifts and qualifications. When these nominations are received, the Monthly Meeting shall forward them to the Quarterly Meeting on Ministry and Oversight for its consideration. If approved by that meeting, the Monthly Meeting may proceed with their appointment. Those so recorded for this station shall serve three years, or until their successors are appointed.

2. Ministers and Elders are associated in the spiritual care of the flock and they should jointly feel the responsibility of the spiritual condition of the membership and the congregation. Elders are to co-operate with, encourage and strengthen the ministers, facilitate their labors, promote their usefulness, have an oversight of the public ministrations of the Gospel, assist therein as the spiritual needs of the congregation may require, and extend such advice and counsel to ministers as circumstances may demand. Elders should have quick spiritual discernment for the proper performance of their duties; a good understanding of the Scriptures and of the doctrines of the Christian religion, and a knowledge of the position and purposes of our branch of the Church. They are to tenderly encourage those who may take any part in public meetings for worship and who give evidence of true spiritual exercise, and they are to restrain such as do not give such evidence. They are to prayerfully seek to discern the spiritual gifts that any may receive and to encourage their exercise and development in every proper way. They are to see that opportunities for such exercise are conveniently afforded. Feeling the weight of the responsibilities resting upon them, Elders will be prayerful in the active performance of their duties, and it is helpful to have them give public endorsement to the ministry, as way may open therefor, when the truth has been satisfactorily presented.

3. Elders are to tenderly advise with members of the congregation as to their spiritual condition, and, in the freedom of brotherly love, endeavor to aid all in the attainment of a higher Christian life, and actively co-operate with the ministers in the pastoral work of the meeting.

4. Each Yearly Meeting will use such method as it may deem best to ascertain the doctrinal views of Ministers and Elders, but only persons who are known to hold and teach Christian doctrines as held by Friends should be recorded or retained in the stations of Ministers and Elders.

CHAPTER VIII.

NEW FIELDS OF WORK.

1. When a new field of work has been entered upon by the members of a congregation, and has progressed beyond their individual care, it should be under the care of the Monthly Meeting, and a new meeting for worship shall be established when advisable.

2. When a Monthly Meeting shall deem it advisable for a new Monthly Meeting to be established within its limits, it shall send a proposition therefor to the Quarterly Meeting, which shall appoint a committee to consider the subject and report. If the Quarterly Meeting approves the proposition it shall establish the meeting and report its action to the Yearly Meeting. Where the meeting to be set up is composed of members of two or more Monthly Meetings, the consent of each shall be obtained.

3. Monthly Meetings have authority to petition Yearly Meetings, through their Quarterly Meetings, to establish, or to discontinue, or to divide a Quarterly Meeting, or to unite two Quarterly Meetings.

CHAPTER IX.

THE QUARTERLY MEETING.

1. A Quarterly Meeting consists of all the Monthly Meetings within its limits and subordinate to it. Its officers shall consist of a Clerk and a Treasurer, who shall be appointed on the recommendation of a Nominating Committee.

2. The Quarterly Meeting has the power to establish, divide or discontinue a Monthly Meeting, or to unite two or more Monthly Meetings.

3. If Friends belonging to two Quarterly Meetings, or to Quarterly Meetings in more than one Yearly Meeting, request the establishment of a new Monthly Meeting, the request shall be sent to all the Quarterly Meetings to which the signers of the request belong, and their consent obtained. The request shall state where and when the new Monthly Meeting is to be held, and to what Quarterly Meeting it is to be attached. When the consent of all the interested Quarterly Meetings has been obtained, the Quarterly Meeting to which the new Monthly Meeting is to be attached shall proceed to establish it as requested.

4. In order to establish, or to discontinue, or to divide a Quarterly Meeting, or to unite two Quarterly Meetings, application should be made by the Monthly Meetings concerned, through their Quarterly Meeting, or respective Quarterly Meetings, to the Yearly Meeting for its action.

5. The Quarterly Meeting has authority over the Monthly Meetings. It may review their proceedings and the records thereof, and shall receive appeals from the Monthly Meetings and decide upon them, and shall grant appeals from its own decisions to the Yearly Meeting.

6. At the last session before the Yearly Meeting, it shall receive from the Monthly Meetings all statistics required by the Yearly Meeting, and also reports on the state of the Church, and upon these shall base its report to the Yearly Meeting.

7. It shall appoint representatives to attend the Yearly Meeting on its behalf. It shall designate two of these, or such number as may be required by the Yearly Meeting, who shall represent it on the Finance Committee of the Yearly Meeting.

CHAPTER X.

SECTION 1.—YEARLY MEETING.

1. A Yearly Meeting consists of the Quarterly Meetings subordinate to it, and it possesses complete legislative, judicial and administrative authority within the limits of this Constitution and Discipline. The design of its annual assemblies is the general ordering and regulating of the affairs of the Church in the service of God and the maintaining and promoting the Christian faith, love, unity, life and practice throughout its subordinate meetings.

2. The Yearly Meeting shall be opened at the appointed time and place by the Clerk of the last annual meeting, and he shall occupy his position until a successor is appointed. In the event of the absence of the Clerk from any cause, the Assistant or Recording Clerk shall perform this service.

3. The representatives from the Quarterly Meetings shall nominate at the second sitting of the Yearly Meeting persons to serve the meeting in the position of Clerk and Assistant Clerk, and such others as may be deemed necessary for the efficient transaction of the business.

4. The Yearly Meeting has the power to decide all questions of discipline and to enforce the same by legislation; to counsel, admonish or discipline its subordinate meetings; to institute measures and provide means for the promotion of truth and righteousness; and to inaugurate and carry on departments of religious and philanthropic work.

5. The Yearly Meeting shall receive annual reports from the Quarterly Meetings as to the state of the Church, to which it shall give prayerful consideration, and it shall extend such counsel and advice in relation thereto as it may deem necessary.

6. The Yearly Meeting shall annually receive abstracts from the minutes of the Quarterly Meetings, containing statements of business for its consideration and action. It may review the proceedings of any Quarterly Meeting and shall give advice and instruction to the Quarterly Meetings when these are requested or may be thought necessary.

7. Business can be introduced to a Yearly Meeting in the reports from Quarterly Meetings, from the Permanent Board, the Standing Committees of the Yearly Meeting, and in communications from the Five Years' Meeting, and from other Yearly Meetings. Business may also be laid before a Yearly Meeting by any of its members with the consent of the Clerk. When the business is of special importance, it shall be referred to a committee before it is acted upon.

8. All propositions from Quarterly Meetings, and all proposed legislation affecting the Constitution and Discipline, shall be introduced to the Yearly Meeting in writing, and shall not be finally acted upon on the day of their introduction. Propositions for the change of Discipline must be referred to the Permanent Board of the Yearly Meeting, or to a special committee, for its consideration for one year. When a proposition is finally approved by a Yearly Meeting it shall be reported to the Five Years' Meeting, which body shall determine whether or not it conflicts with the Constitution and Discipline.

9. The Yearly Meeting shall receive and decide all cases of appeal regularly brought before it from the Quarterly Meetings. Its procedure in treating such appeals is indicated in the section on Appeals. It may also review the proceedings of any Quarterly or Monthly Meeting.

10. The Yearly Meeting, unless incorporated under the laws of a State making it unnecessary, shall appoint Trustees—not fewer than three nor more than seven in each case—who shall hold the titles of its real estate, and have the same duly recorded in the official records of the State or county. Trustees shall be similarly appointed to invest all funds and other personal property, whether received by bequest, donation or otherwise, and to administer the same according to the directions of the donors. The Yearly Meeting shall have one or more such boards of Trustees as it may deem advisable. Due care must be exercised by Trustees to observe the requirements of the statutes of their several states in the administration of their trusts.

11. Each Yearly Meeting shall annually appoint a Finance Committee, composed of those designated by the Quarterly Meetings for the service, who shall consider and report upon the propositions for appropriations by the Yearly Meeting, audit the accounts of the Treasurer, and of the various boards and committees having charge of the expenditure of funds, and ascertain and report what amounts it will be necessary for the Yearly Meeting to raise.

12. Each Yearly Meeting shall appoint, as succession may require, a person to serve as Treasurer. He shall receive the money from the Quarterly Meetings, and from other sources, for the Yearly Meeting's use, and shall pay the same as directed by the Yearly Meeting or its Permanent Board. He shall be authorized to receive and officially receipt for all legacies, donations or other funds requiring a formal legal acknowledgment.

13. Each Yearly Meeting shall appoint, as succession may require, one or more persons to serve as Correspondent. A Correspondent shall countersign certificates of ministers liberated for service in foreign lands, epistles and other documents issued to other Yearly Meetings, and such documents and transcripts of records as may require certification beyond the signature of the Clerk.

14. A proposition to establish a new Yearly Meeting shall be reported by the Yearly Meeting or Meetings concerned to the Five Years' Meeting.

15. Each Yearly Meeting may appoint an Evangelistic and Church Extension Committee, whose duties are prescribed in Part III.

SECTION 2.—THE PERMANENT BOARD.

1. Each Yearly Meeting shall have a Permanent Board (heretofore called the Representative Meeting), to consist of not more than fifty members, who shall be selected so that each Quarterly Meeting of the Yearly Meeting shall be represented. One-fifth of their number shall be appointed each year to serve for five years. As the existence of the Board will thus be continuous, its name indicates its distinctive character. It shall annually appoint a Clerk for the management of its business.

2. It shall meet at such times and places as the Yearly Meeting may designate, or upon its own adjournment. Special meetings may be called by the Clerk on the requisition of five members. Five days' notice of special meetings must be given in writing to all members, and the business to come before the special meeting shall be stated in the call. At least one-fourth of the total number of members shall be required for the transaction of business, and in no case shall action be taken unless one-fourth of the total membership of the Board approves.

3. The Permanent Board shall represent the Yearly Meeting in the interim of its annual assemblies, and it may act on behalf of the Yearly Meeting in cases where the interest or reputation of the church may render it necessary. It shall attend to such business as the Yearly Meeting may refer to it. It shall examine memorials of deceased members, transmitted to it from subordinate meetings, and such as are approved it may recommend to the Yearly Meeting for publication.

4. It shall inspect and ascertain, when necessary, titles to land and other estates belonging to any meeting; it shall attend to the appropriation of charitable legacies and donations when necessary, and it may give advice, where needed, on such matters. It shall extend such advice and assistance to persons suffering on account of our Christian testimonies as their cases may require, and, when necessary, apply to the government or to persons in authority on their behalf.

5. It shall keep a record of its proceedings, and annually lay the same before the Yearly Meeting.

6. It may draw on the Treasurer of the Yearly Meeting to pay the necessary expenses incurred in the execution of its duties.

CHAPTER XI.

THE FINANCIAL SUPPORT OF THE CHURCH.

1. Meetings are to give careful attention to wise methods for raising funds for the service of the Church; they shall encourage voluntary giving and shall make such arrangements as will extend to every member an opportunity to contribute as he may desire. Every member should contribute according to his means, and a failure to do this becomes a culpable avoidance of Christian duty. The ordinary necessary expenses of the meetings may properly be raised by quota.

CHAPTER XII.

MEETINGS ON MINISTRY AND OVERSIGHT.

Ministers, Elders and Overseers may be aided in their work by co-operation and mutual consultation. To facilitate this, Meetings on Ministry and Oversight are established.

SECTION 1.—THE LOCAL MEETING ON MINISTRY AND OVERSIGHT.

1. The Local Meeting on Ministry and Oversight is composed of all the Ministers, Elders and Overseers within the limits of the Monthly Meeting of which they are members. Its regular meetings shall be held once in three months, or, where the needs may require, it may meet oftener by adjournment. Special meetings may be called by the Clerk on the request of five members. Notice in writing shall be sent to the members five full days before such special meeting.

2. The Local Meeting on Ministry and Oversight shall have the care of the ministry and the religious work in its congregations. At each regular session the members from each congregation shall designate one of their number who shall present to the meeting a verbal report of the spiritual condition and life of the congregation, the attendance at meetings for public worship, the character of the ministry and its adaptation to the needs of the meeting; statements shall be made as to the evidence of the reception of spiritual gifts by any of the members, and of the care that has been extended toward the exercise and development of such gifts; information shall be given of any special work that may have been entered upon, and of any available fields for service. These reports from the several congregations shall be practically considered, and such action shall be taken, or such advice and assistance given, as the circumstances may require.

3. Care is to be given that ministers and other teachers present positive teachings of the doctrines of the Gospel as understood by Friends. This care is to be extended in the spirit of brotherly love and mutual helpfulness.

4. When there is evidence that a person has received a gift in the ministry, action shall be taken in accordance with the chapter on the recording of ministers.

5. Where ministers are called for special service in particular meetings, the initiative in such arrangement shall be taken by the pastoral committee of the congregation. They shall submit their proposal to the Local Meeting on Ministry and Oversight, and if this meeting approves of the proposition it shall be laid before the Monthly Meeting for final action. Such ministers shall carry on their labors in harmony with the general principles of the denomination and agreeably to the provisions of this Constitution and Discipline, taking care that, in all meetings for worship, opportunity be afforded for the free exercise by the members of the congregation of any gifts for service which the Lord may confer.

When a Monthly Meeting is satisfied that a minister's services in such position are no longer required, it should terminate this relation.

6. If any minister shall teach doctrines or encourage practices subversive of our faith, or shall appear to have lost his gift in the ministry and usefulness in his station, the Local Meeting on Ministry and Oversight shall report the case to the Quarterly Meeting on Ministry and Oversight. If that meeting concurs in such judgment the case shall be reported to the Monthly Meeting for its action. If, however, the Local Meeting on Ministry and Oversight fails to report as above directed, then the Quarterly Meeting on Ministry and Oversight may take the initiatory step.

7. The Local Meeting on Ministry and Oversight shall appoint representatives to the Quarterly Meeting on Ministry and Oversight. It shall also report to such Quarterly Meeting a summary of the information received as to the spiritual condition and life of its congregations.

SECTION 2.—QUARTERLY MEETINGS ON MINISTRY AND OVERSIGHT.

1. A Quarterly Meeting on Ministry and Oversight is composed of the members of the Local Meetings on Ministry and Oversight within its limits. It shall meet regularly near the time of the Quarterly Meeting to transact the business pertaining to its department of Church government, and it shall appoint representatives, and make a report to the Yearly Meeting on Ministry and Oversight.

2. Quarterly Meetings on Ministry and Oversight shall consider cases forwarded to it from the Local Meetings on Ministry and Oversight for the acknowledgment of ministers. When the proposition for the acknowledgment of a gift in the ministry is approved the Quarterly Meeting shall so inform the Monthly Meeting. When the proposition is not approved it shall so inform the Local Meeting in which the proposition originated.

3. When the Quarterly Meeting on Ministry and Oversight receives from a Local Meeting a proposition for rescinding the recording of a minister who has lost his gift and his usefulness, it shall report to the Monthly Meeting its conclusion in the case. The minister shall not sit as a member of the meetings on Ministry and Oversight while his case is pending, but he may, if he desires, attend to make statements on his own behalf and to answer accusations. He must, however, retire while the decision is being made.

4. The Quarterly Meeting on Ministry and Oversight shall have the general care of the pastoral work within its limits. It shall be diligent and judicious in devising measures and means for the promotion of spiritual life and godliness, and it shall give special attention to new congregations, weaker meetings, and those without a minister.

SECTION 3.—YEARLY MEETINGS ON MINISTRY AND OVERSIGHT.

1. The Yearly Meeting on Ministry and Oversight is composed of the members of the Quarterly Meetings on Ministry and Oversight within its limits. It shall meet annually at such time as the Yearly Meeting may direct, and thereafter on its own adjournment, but in no case so as to conflict with the sittings of the Yearly Meeting.

2. It shall receive reports from the Quarterly Meetings on Ministry and Oversight, covering the matters upon which they receive reports from the Local Meetings on Ministry and Oversight; and it shall annually report to the Yearly Meeting the condition and work of the ministry, and of its membership; it may address epistles of advice and instruction to its subordinate meetings, and appoint committees to visit them.

3. The Yearly Meetings on Ministry and Oversight shall carefully consider subjects which have reference to the spiritual needs of the Church, and it may report its judgment to the Yearly Meeting for its action.

CHAPTER XIII.

SECTION 1.—THE FIVE YEARS' MEETING.

1. The Five Years' Meeting shall be composed of delegates appointed by the several Yearly Meetings on the American continent. Each Yearly Meeting shall be entitled to five delegates, and to one additional delegate for each one thousand members or fraction thereof greater than five hundred.

2. The Five Years' Meeting shall be opened by the Clerk of the last meeting at the time and place set by its own adjournment, and he shall occupy his position until his successor is appointed. In the event of the absence of the Clerk, the first assistant Clerk shall perform this service.

3. The chairmen of the delegates from the Yearly Meetings shall nominate at the second session of the meeting persons to serve the meeting as Clerk, First Assistant Clerk, and Second Assistant Clerk, and such others as may be deemed necessary for the efficient transaction of the business.

4. The Five Years' Meeting is invested with full jurisdiction over all matters of legislation and administration delegated to it by this Constitution. It shall also have general advisory supervision of the interests of the denomination, and shall publish its full proceedings for the information of the Yearly Meetings and their membership.

5. The expenses of the Five Years' Meeting shall be apportioned among the several Yearly Meetings according to their membership. In apportioning such expenses so much of the same shall be assessed against each Yearly Meeting, as, when added to the actual traveling expenses of its delegates necessary to reach the place at which the Five Years' Meeting is held, shall represent its proportion of the total expenses, according to membership.

6. The several Yearly Meetings shall furnish the Five Years' Meeting with such statistical information as it may request.

7. The Five Years' Meeting shall have charge of the departments of work as set forth in Part III.

SECTION 2.—NEW YEARLY MEETINGS.

When it is proposed to establish a new Yearly Meeting by setting off a portion of an existing Yearly Meeting, or portions of two or more Yearly Meetings, or when two Yearly Meetings may wish to be united, such meeting or meetings shall inform the Five Years' Meeting of their approval of the proposition. The Board of Foreign Missions shall, in like manner, inform the Five Years' Meeting where the organization of a Yearly Meeting is proposed in one or more of its mission fields. The Five Years' Meeting shall carefully consider the entire proposition, and shall establish such new Yearly Meeting if it shall deem it advisable so to do.

When a new Yearly Meeting is to be established the Five Years' Meeting shall appoint a committee, not to exceed ten in number, to attend the opening of such Yearly Meeting, with the minute of the Five Years' Meeting establishing it, and this committee shall inaugurate its sessions in accordance with the organization of existing Yearly Meetings.

Yearly Meetings may also show their interest in the establishment of a new Yearly Meeting by appointing committees to attend the opening of such.

Part III.

Departments of Work.

CHAPTER I.

THE PASTORAL COMMITTEE OF THE MONTHLY MEETING.

1. It is the duty of this committee to have a general oversight of the shepherding of the flock, to be watchful of the interests of absent members, to visit the families of attenders of meetings, and to extend a special care to those attenders who are not members, and to invite them to join in membership when they are prepared to do so.

2. Once a year this committee shall make a report in writing to the Monthly Meeting of the spiritual condition of the membership, of the attendance upon public worship, of family devotions, of the conduct of the members in their relations to one another and to the world, of Christian work in which the members are engaged, and of such other matters as may pertain to the affairs of the congregation.

CHAPTER II.

THE EVANGELISTIC COMMITTEE OF THE QUARTERLY MEETING.

The Quarterly Meeting shall have the general oversight and care of the work of the Church within its borders; it shall be diligent to assist the congregations in carrying it on, and it shall have authority to open and assume charge of new fields of labor. It may annually appoint an Evangelistic Committee to advance these interests, and whose chairman shall be an advisory member of the Yearly Meeting's Committee on Evangelistic and Church Extension Work.

CHAPTER III.

EVANGELISTIC AND CHURCH EXTENSION COMMITTEE OF THE YEARLY MEETING.

1. Each Yearly Meeting may appoint a Committee on Evangelistic and Church Extension Work, whose duty it shall be to ascertain the needy fields within the limits of the Yearly Meeting, and endeavor to meet the requirements of these by such gospel service as may, under the Divine blessing, arouse the lukewarm and indifferent, bring sinners to repentance and faith in Christ, strengthen believers, and advance the interests of the Church. Special attention shall be given to gathering the scattered membership and to the establishment of meetings where practicable. They shall be authorized to secure funds by voluntary contributions for building new meeting houses and repairing old ones where necessary. When this committee engages in evangelistic work within the limits of a Quarterly Meeting, it should maintain harmonious relations with the Quarterly Meeting on Ministry and Oversight.

2. The committee shall organize by the appointment of a Chairman, a Secretary, and a Treasurer, who, with the General Superintendent, where such is appointed, shall constitute the Executive Committee. These persons shall perform the duties usually pertaining to their positions.

Upon the nomination of the committee the Yearly Meeting may appoint a General Superintendent of Evangelistic and Church Extension Work, who shall perform such duties as the committee may direct.

3. The chairmen of the Quarterly Meetings' committees shall be advisory members of this Yearly Meeting's committee.

CHAPTER IV.

BOARDS OF THE FIVE YEARS' MEETING.

SECTION 1.—BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

A General Board of Foreign Missions shall be organized, to consist of two members from each Yearly Meeting, and an additional member for each eight thousand members and fractional part thereof above five thousand, to be designated by the Yearly Meetings when their delegates to the Five Years' Meeting are appointed, to serve for five years. Each Yearly Meeting shall fill vacancies in the number of its members. The Board of Foreign Missions thus constituted shall meet before the final adjournment of the Five Years' Meeting and appoint from among their number a Chairman, a Secretary and a Treasurer, and two others who, with these officers, shall constitute an Executive Committee. The names of these officers shall be reported to the Five Years' Meeting and published in its proceedings.

The Board of Foreign Missions shall have a general advisory oversight of the Foreign Mission work of the several Yearly Meetings represented in the Board. With the approval of two-thirds of its members it may enter upon mission fields not occupied by any Yearly Meeting; and it may assume control of such missionary work as any Yearly Meeting may see fit to transfer to it.

The members of the Board from the several Yearly Meetings shall fully inform the Secretary of the mission fields, and of the work in their Yearly Meetings, and of their subordinate meetings.

The Executive Committee of the Board shall have the general charge of its affairs in executing the directions of the Board. The members of the Executive Committee shall be paid their actual expenses in the performance of their duties.

It shall be the duty of the Chairman to preside at the meetings of the Board and of the Executive Committee, and to order such payments as are to be made by the Treasurer for the obligations authorized by the Board or the Executive Committee.

The Secretary shall be the executive officer of the Board, and it shall be his duty to collect information respecting the condition and needs of Foreign Mission fields, and to learn, as far as possible, the best means of supplying those needs; to obtain from the members of the Board, and from other sources, full information of the Foreign Mission work carried on by the several Yearly Meetings represented in the Board, or by the members of these Yearly Meetings, and to advise those in charge of such work in reference thereto; to ascertain the qualifications and preferences of those offering themselves as missionaries; to collect and publish full statistics concerning all the Foreign Mission work of Friends in America, and in general to obtain and impart such information, from within and without the denomination, as may aid the Foreign Mission work.

The Secretary shall be paid such salary as the Board may determine.

It shall be the duty of the Treasurer to receive all funds for the use of the Board, and to disburse them on the order of the Chairman. He shall keep the said funds in a separate bank account, and his accounts shall be examined annually by auditors appointed by the Board.

The Secretary and Treasurer shall annually make separate reports to the members of the Board and to each Yearly Meeting, and the Board shall make full report to the Five Years' Meeting.

Voluntary contributions for the work of the Board shall be annually solicited in every congregation of each Yearly Meeting, care being taken to give to each member an opportunity to participate therein; and each Yearly Meeting will make the necessary arrangements therefor.

The expenses of the administration of the Board, not otherwise provided for, shall be apportioned to the several Yearly Meetings uniting in the work of the Board, according to the number of their members, and each Yearly Meeting shall raise its quota thereof in such manner as it may choose.

If there shall be any Yearly Meeting that does not adopt this Uniform Discipline, but which may desire to place all or any portion of its mission work under the direction and control of the Board of Missions, the Board shall be at liberty to undertake the same with such arrangements as to the expenses of the work as may be agreed upon.

The Board of Foreign Missions shall become incorporated under the laws of the State of Indiana, with the title of "American Friends' Board of Foreign Missions," and they shall appoint Trustees to receive, invest and administer, according to the laws of the said State, such gifts, bequests and contributions as may be made for the use and purposes of the Board. This incorporation shall include provisions for holding and transferring real estate wherever necessary.

The Board of Foreign Missions may establish regulations for the admission of members in the various fields under its care, and for the establishment and organization of meetings of such members. These meetings shall continue under the care and supervision of the Board until such time as, in its judgment, a Yearly Meeting should be established, when the Board shall report the situation, with its recommendations, to the Five Years' Meeting, which body, after careful consideration, shall be at liberty to establish such Yearly Meetings in the manner directed in the chapter on new Yearly Meetings.

SECTION 2.—EVANGELISTIC AND CHURCH EXTENSION BOARD.

An Evangelistic and Church Extension Board shall be appointed by the Five Years' Meeting, to consist of two members from each Yearly Meeting, and an additional member for each eight thousand members and fractional part thereof above five thousand, to serve for five years. The committee thus appointed shall meet before the final adjournment of the meeting, and appoint from among their number a Chairman, a Treasurer, and a Secretary, who, with two additional members appointed for the purpose, shall constitute the Executive Committee. The names of these officers shall be reported to the meeting and published in its proceedings.

The duties of these officers shall be such as the Board may determine.

The members of this Board shall inform the Secretary of the needs for, and the progress of, Evangelistic work in their several Yearly Meetings, and of the names and organizations of such Evangelistic Committees as these meetings may have, and the Secretary shall keep a complete record of the ministers and their addresses in all the Yearly Meetings.

The Evangelistic and Church Extension Board shall obtain such information as may be possible in reference to neglected fields within the several Yearly Meetings, or in territory accessible therefrom, and shall advise the Evangelistic and Church Extension Committee of the Yearly Meeting in reference thereto. Where the needs of these fields are greater than the Yearly Meeting in whose care they are placed can properly meet, the Board may assist in the work, upon the request of the Yearly Meeting, by the contribution of funds obtained for this purpose by solicitations from Friends and others. When such fields, within or without a Yearly Meeting, have been entered upon, and the erection of buildings for public worship has become advisable, the Evangelistic and Church Extension Board shall solicit funds from Friends and others for this purpose, in such manner as it may deem proper; they shall advise in reference to the erection of such buildings, and they may take temporary charge of the work where it may seem desirable so to do. They may also establish a permanent building fund.

The Board may also make loans of judicious amounts, from funds in its hands, taking proper security for their repayment, but charging no interest therefor for the term of three years, for the purpose of aiding in the erection of buildings for public worship wherever, in the judgment of the committee, such assistance may be advisable.

The Evangelistic and Church Extension Board shall make a report of its work to the Five Years' Meeting. The expenses of its correspondence shall be an expense of the meeting.

SECTION 3.—LEGISLATION.

The Five Years' Meeting shall appoint a committee of two members from each Yearly Meeting, and this committee shall appoint from their number a sub-committee of five. The former, in conjunction with the Permanent Boards of the Yearly Meetings, shall give attention to legislation in their respective States affecting the denomination and the interests it represents; and the latter shall give attention to subjects before the National Congress, and in those states where there are no organized meetings of Friends. The committee shall have authority to issue statements as to the position of this branch of the Church when urgent occasions shall arise.

SECTION 4.—EDUCATION.

The Five Years' Meeting shall appoint a committee, to consist of one member from each Yearly Meeting, who shall have an advisory supervision of Friends' schools and colleges; who shall give information concerning pressing needs that may arise; who may advise for or against the establishment of new institutions or the closing or consolidation of old ones; who may recommend text books that give valuable information concerning the history or doctrines of our branch of the Church; and who may establish a Friends' Teachers' Agency.

SECTION 5.—PHILANTHROPY.

It shall also be the duty of the Committee on Legislation to aid Friends anywhere who, from exceptional causes, may need special assistance not rendered by the customary manner of caring for the poor; and to participate with other Christians in relieving distress resulting from unusual causes. They shall be at liberty to solicit contributions for the purposes of their appointment.

SECTION 6.—INDIANS.

The Five Years' Meeting may undertake the work of securing justice to the North American Indians in all their interests, and may engage in efforts for their civilization and christianization when it may deem it advisable to do so.

SECTION 7.—PEACE AND ARBITRATION.

The Five Years' Meeting may engage in the work of advancing the cause of Peace and Arbitration whenever it may deem it advisable to do so.

Part IV.

Rules of Discipline.

CHAPTER I.

SECTION 1.—DEALING WITH OFFENDERS.

1. When complaint has been introduced against any member by the Overseers to the Monthly Meeting, a committee shall be appointed to confer with the offender, and, in a spirit of love, show him his error, and, if possible, lead him to repentance and confession of the same, in order that he may be restored to fellowship in the Church. After due care and forbearance have been extended without avail, the Monthly Meeting shall execute a minute of disownment and furnish the offender with a copy of the same.

2. When any member habitually neglects the attendance of meetings for worship, without reasonable excuse, after a period of three years, and due care on the part of the Monthly Meeting, his name may be removed from the list of members, and the meeting shall inform him of its action.

3. If any member shall deny the fundamental doctrines of the Christian religion, or shall be guilty of conduct that brings the Christian religion into public disrepute, the Monthly Meeting shall appoint a committee to endeavor, in a Christian spirit, to reclaim him; if this prove unavailing it shall disown him.

4. Members removing to places remote from any Monthly Meeting should correspond with their Monthly Meetings, and, where practicable, Monthly Meetings, through a committee, should correspond with their absent members. If no information has been, or can be, received from a member for a period of three years, his Monthly Meeting, in its discretion, may remove his name from its list of members.

SECTION 2.—APPEALS.

1. When a member who has been under dealings by a Monthly Meeting is dissatisfied with its decision, he may inform the next Monthly Meeting, or the one succeeding it, of his desire to appeal to the Quarterly Meeting for its review of the case. The Monthly Meeting shall grant permission for such action to be taken, and shall place the same upon its records and inform the Quarterly Meeting thereof. A committee of three shall be appointed to present the case to the Quarterly Meeting.

2. When a Quarterly Meeting receives a notice of appeal from a Monthly Meeting it shall refer the subject to a committee, omitting from the appointment members of the Monthly Meeting appealed from. The committee shall carefully and deliberately examine the whole proceedings in the case from their commencement, giving the appellant and the Monthly Meeting's Committee a full hearing. If it is found that the offence has been rightly adjudged and the charge substantiated, and that the proceedings have been in accordance with discipline, they are to so report to the Quarterly Meeting, and that meeting, if it approves of the report, shall confirm the judgment of the Monthly Meeting and inform the appellant of the result.

3. But if it appears that the offence has not been correctly adjudged, or that the charge has not been sufficiently sustained, or that any irregularity in the proceedings has infringed the rights of the appellant, the committee shall report in accordance therewith, and the Quarterly Meeting, if it approves of the report, shall set aside the judgment of the Monthly Meeting.

4. In all cases where the judgment of a meeting is set aside, the ground of such decision must be entered upon the minutes, and the meeting affected informed thereof. If that ground be one of irregularity of proceeding only, the meeting shall be at liberty to take up the case again, and correct its error.

5. Should the appellant be dissatisfied with the judgment of the Quarterly Meeting, and notify the next Quarterly Meeting, or the one succeeding it, but none later, of his intention to apply to the Yearly Meeting for a further hearing, the Quarterly Meeting shall record the notification and appoint three or more members to attend the Yearly Meeting with copies of the Monthly and Quarterly Meeting's minutes in the case, and with instructions to present the case to the committee of the Yearly Meeting.

Any appeal made to the Yearly Meeting must be presented not later than the second day of the sitting of that body, and the appellant is to be informed by the committee of the Quarterly Meeting of the time of this presentation.

6. An appellant shall have a right to be present during the appointment of the committee in his case, and objections which he may then make to persons nominated on the committee are to be judged of by the meeting.

7. The committee appointed by the Yearly Meeting in a case of appeal from a Quarterly Meeting shall examine into and judge of the nature of the offence, and the proceedings in the case, and they shall fully consider the statement of the appellant and that of the respondents, and also the minutes of the Monthly and Quarterly Meeting in the case, and shall report to the Yearly Meeting. The decision of the Yearly Meeting shall be final.

CHAPTER II. MARRIAGE.

1. Parties desiring to unite in marriage according to the long-standing custom of Friends should inform the Monthly Meeting of which one or both of them are members, that they intend marriage with each other, which meeting shall enter the proposal on its minutes; and, if either party is a minor, consent of parents or guardians must be given to the meeting, and all are advised to consult their parents before entering into marriage engagements, and produce their consent to the Monthly Meeting.

2. If either party is a member of another Monthly Meeting, the Monthly Meeting where the proposition is introduced should have satisfactory information thereof that the fact may be stated on the record.

3. When any of our members become satisfied to join in marriage with one not in membership with us, the same procedure is recommended as when both are members, the Monthly Meeting noting the fact of non-membership on its records.

4. If any objections have been presented to the Overseers, which they shall judge reasonable, they should inform the Monthly Meeting, and a committee should be appointed to investigate and report, when the meeting may dismiss the case or proceed in it, as shall appear right.

5. If no obstruction appears, the parties shall be left at liberty to accomplish their marriage according to the Rules of Discipline.

6. A committee of two men and two women Friends should be appointed to attend marriages, and make report of their care to the Monthly Meeting.

7. Monthly Meetings shall not, in any case, recognize marriage proceedings under circumstances which would violate the laws of the State in which the marriage is solemnized.

8. Marriages under the Rules of Discipline shall be solemnized in a regular week-day meeting, or at a meeting appointed by the Monthly Meeting.

9. At a suitable time in the meeting the parties should stand up, and, taking each other by the right hand, declare to the following effect, the man first: "In the presence of the Lord, and before these witnesses, I take thee, D. E., to be my wife, promising, with Divine assistance, to be unto thee a loving and faithful husband, until death shall separate us."

And the woman in like manner:

"In the presence of the Lord, and before these witnesses, I take thee, A. B., to be my husband, promising, with Divine assistance, to be unto thee a loving and faithful wife, until death shall separate us."

10. A certificate is then to be signed by the parties, the man first, the woman next, adopting the name of her husband; and then it is to be audibly read by some proper person. At the conclusion of the meeting it should be signed by others as witnesses.

11. Parties who are to marry must carefully observe the requirements of the laws of their state, both in obtaining a license, when such is required, and after the ceremony, in reporting the marriage to the proper civil officers.

12. Each Yearly Meeting may make such carefully considered regulations for the solemnization of marriage as its local conditions may make advisable.

CHAPTER III.

SECTION 1.—QUERIES.

1. Our members are reminded that the intention of having queries read in our meetings relative to the conduct of individuals and our Christian profession, is not only for the purpose of being informed of the state of our meetings, but also to impress on the minds of Friends a profitable examination of themselves, to determine how far they act consistently with their religious principles. Every member, therefore, is earnestly recommended to examine whether he, himself, is coming up in that life of self-denial and devotedness unto God which so highly becomes all who make profession of the name of Christ. It is not to arrangements, however perfect, but to individual faithfulness to Christ in daily dependence upon the help of the Holy Spirit, that we must look for growth in the truth, and vitality in the Church. As this faithfulness and dependence are maintained, we believe these queries will tend to promote the religious welfare of our members, and to the upholding of our Christian discipline in a lively and healthy condition.

2. These queries are to be read in Monthly and Quarterly Meetings, three times a year.

Query 1. Are all meetings for worship and discipline regularly held? Do Friends attend them duly, and at the hour appointed?

Query 2. Are love and unity maintained among you? And, if any differences arise, are endeavors used to end them speedily?

Query 3. Are you careful to maintain a religious life and conversation? Do you have daily family worship, and do you frequently read the Holy Scriptures? Are you careful to instruct your children in a knowledge of the same, and to train them for upright and useful lives? And do you labor for their early conversion and growth in grace?

Query 4. Do you abstain from the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, and from the use of tobacco? Are you careful to avoid amusements and diversions inconsistent with a Christian character; and to observe true moderation in all things?

Query 5. Do you faithfully maintain our testimony against bearing arms, and other military matters; against oaths, and against defrauding the public revenue, and against membership in secret societies?

Query 6. Do you frequently inspect your affairs and settle your accounts? Are you punctual to your promises, and just in the payment of your debts, and careful to live within the bounds of your circumstances?

SECTION 2.—QUERIES FOR MEETINGS ON MINISTRY AND OVERSIGHT.

These queries are to be read three times a year in the Local and Quarterly Meetings on Ministry and Oversight.

Query 1. Are you prayerfully concerned that you may yourselves be preserved in humble dependence upon Christ? Have you an earnest, religious exercise for the conversions of sinners, and for the edifying of the body in the faith and love of the Gospel?

Query 2. Are you concerned faithfully to occupy the spiritual gifts entrusted to you, to the honor of God?

Query 3. Are your lives and conversation clean and blameless?

Query 4. Are you diligent in attending your meetings for worship and discipline, and careful to promote the attendance of your families?

Query 5. Are you in unity one with another, and with the meetings to which you belong, harmoniously laboring together to bring men to Christ?

Query 6. Are you engaged frequently in searching the Holy Scriptures, prayerfully seeking a right understanding of their contents under the enlightening influence of the Holy Spirit; and are you careful not to misquote or misapply them?

FOURTH QUARTER.

Lesson XIII.

Twelfth Month 24, 1899.

CHRIST'S COMING FORETOLD.

Isaiah 9: 2-7.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Unto you is born this day in the city of David, a Saviour which is Christ the Lord. Luke 2: 11.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Twelfth mo. 18.—Christ's coming foretold. Isa. 9: 2-7.

Third-day, Twelfth mo. 19.—Prince of Peace. Isa. 11: 1-10.

Fourth-day, Twelfth mo. 20.—The Lord our righteousness. Jer. 23: 1-6.

Fifth-day, Twelfth mo. 21.—Good tidings. Isa. 40: 1-11.

Sixth-day, Twelfth mo. 22.—A blessed reign. Psalms 72: 1-17.

Seventh-day, Twelfth mo. 23.—A Prophet. Acts 3: 13-26.

First-day, Twelfth mo. 24.—Testified beforehand. 1 Pet. 1: 1-12.

The book of Isaiah is one of the most familiar books of the Old Testament. Viewed simply as literature, it is one of the most attractive, while from the spiritual point of view, few books of the Old Testament, if any, can equal it. So nearly does the teaching of this wonderful book approach that of the New Covenant, that it has been called the "Evangelical Prophecy."

Upon few books of the Bible has modern study been more concentrated, and yet in no degree have its great truths been dimmed, or its spiritual teaching obscured. On the contrary, we understand, as never before, the personal greatness of the prophet, and the force of his burning words—so fitted to the age in which he spoke, and so full of meaning to us, who live in the day which he saw only in prophetic vision.

The book very clearly consists of at least two parts—chapters 1-39, and 40-66. The lesson is taken from the first division, and from the group of prophecies contained in chapters 7-9: 7. These relate to the period of the Syro-Ephraimitish war (735-734 B.C.) It was in the reign of Ahaz that Pekah, King of Israel, united with Rezin, King of Damascus, to attack Judah, who was supposed to lean towards Assyria. Ahaz wished to join Assyria and so protect his kingdom. Isaiah warned him against this alliance, and told him that destruction would come upon Judah as the result; whereas, if he refrained, Assyria would attack his enemies and conquer them. It was true that Judah would not escape attack and great suffering, but she would in the end be delivered, if she would trust the Lord and not ally herself with Assyria. The King, however, refused to hear Isaiah. The account will be found in 2 Kings, chapters 16-21; 2 Chron. 26-33, and, briefly, in Isaiah 7.

The lesson is from the conclusion of the prophecy. The prophet says that in time the mystery of the present will be cleared up, the Messiah will come, and the kingdom of David will be restored. In the vision of the prophet the time seems to be present, and the kingdom is described as already existent.

2. "Darkness." Deadly shade. Ps. 23: 4.

3. "Thou hast multiplied the nation." Some would read this, "Thou hast multiplied the exultation." This seems rather more in accord with the context. "And not." The revised Version reads, "And hast increased the joy." This rendering is also in better accord with the context. "They joy before thee," etc. Compare Deut. 12: 7. "Harvest." When men rejoice over their crops. Ps. 4: 8; 126: 5, 6. "Divide the spoil." Ps. 119: 162.

4. "Yoke." The yoke which burdened him. "Staff of his shoulder," or of his "back." The staff which was used to beat him. "Oppressor." Task-master. Compare Ex. 5: 6. "Midian." See Judges 7: 1-23. The story of Gideon. "Day." The day of battle.

5. "For all the armor of the armed man in the tumult, and the garments rolled in blood, shall even be for burning, for fuel of fire." Revised Version. This translation is forcible and clear; that in the Authorized Version is not. More literally still, it would read, "Yea, every boot of him that stamped with noise and the cloak rolled in blood—they are to be burned up as fuel of fire." "As long as war exists, there must be conquest and slavery. Hence war must be destroyed; the very emblems of war broken forever."

6. "For unto us a child is born." The Messiah. As to when Isaiah expected Him to come no hint is given. The prophet appears to be purposely vague. "The government." Not of Judah alone, but the world. Compare Micah 5: 3-5.

"His name shall be called." The titles which follow are those which describe an ideal king and express "mainly the qualities displayed in his government." "Wonderful, Counsellor." As each of the other names is a compound, there seems no reason why these words should not be joined also—"Wonderful-Counsellor," or Wonder-Counsellor." "One who counsels wonderful things," or wonderful in counsel. "Mighty God." Strong against his enemies. Some would translate it, "Hero-God." "Everlasting Father." "Father," because he will rule as a father. "Everlasting." Not so much because He is eternal, but because His feelings and attitude and treatment will always continue to be fatherly. The great revelation of Christ was that of God as a Father—an everlasting Father. To those who really grasp this truth all else comes easily. "The Prince of Peace." The kingdom of the Messiah is to be a peaceful one. Compare Micah 5: 5; Zech. 9: 10; Is. 2: 2-4; 11: 4-9.

"The wrong shall fail,

The right prevail,

With peace on earth, good will to men."

It is sad to think that this part of the prophecy of the old prophet is still, after more than twenty centuries, unfulfilled—outwardly.

7. There shall be extension and peaceful establishment. "To establish it and to uphold it with judgment and with righteousness." Revised Version. It will not be established by force, but by moral and spiritual influence. "Righteousness is the principle of right action; judgment the embodiment of that principle in decisions." "The Zeal," etc. The earnestness —literally, the "jealousy," the intense desire. Compare Zech. 1: 14; 8: 2.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. "The Spirit of God yearns after the lost, speaks to the self-despairing of hope, and surprises rebel and prophet alike with new revelations of love."

2. "O'er every foe victorious,
He on His throne shall rest,
From age to age more glorious,
All blessing and all blest."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR TWELFTH MONTH 24th, 1899.

OUR ROYAL BROTHER.

Heb. 1: 1-9; 3: 6.

(A Christmas Meeting.)

Second-day, Twelfth mo. 18.—Born king. Luke 2: 8-20.

Third-day, Twelfth mo. 19.—Thy king cometh. Matt. 21: 1-11.

Fourth-day, Twelfth mo. 20.—Art thou a king? John 18: 33-38.

Fifth-day, Twelfth mo. 21.—Who are my brethren? Matt. 12: 46-50.

Sixth-day, Twelfth mo. 22.—The adoption of sons. Gal. 4: 1-7.

Seventh-day, Twelfth mo. 23.—Joint-heirs with Christ. Rom. 8: 12-17.

Christmas time brings back our thoughts again to the coming of Christ in the flesh, to the mystery of the incarnation by which He became indeed our brother—one with us. What are some of the lessons of this incarnation? First, He dignified and ennobled our common humanity. It is not an easy thing to get the right measure of man. Whole nations and whole centuries—yes, even millenniums—have missed it. Great systems of religion dominating the conscience of untold millions have utterly perverted it. Jesus Christ has been the inspiration of all the centuries wherever He has been known. One often sees in museums or similar places the garments worn by great men of past generations. We attach a sort of sacredness even to the apparel of greatness. How much more sacred is that humanity He shared in common with us.

But it is not simply a perfect, an ideal man, that we have in Jesus of Nazareth. The eternal word created the visible world, but He did not become the world. He created all men, but He did not become the human race. The word became flesh, the One Man, Christ Jesus. In so doing He came to reveal God to men. But it is just here that many of us stumble. We still try to look away from or past Christ to find God. We ignorantly ask for some other, some more spectacular manifestation of God. But just what do we want when we say that? What are the attributes of God that we want displayed? Great power, dazzling splendor, vast size, overpowering magnificence, would not bring God any nearer to us. These are childish cravings. It is the revelation of infinite goodness, unconquered holiness, infinite love, in a personality like unto ourselves, that brings God near to us. Jesus Christ truly came to declare God unto us in these, His highest attributes. We learned in Him that to be a God is to have more love than all others; to make greater sacrifices, to have an infinite capacity to humble Himself. It is this infinite brotherliness of God that is the highest charm of the Christian faith.

The writer to the Hebrews, from which book our lesson is taken, had to contend with this difficulty in those to whom he addressed his epistle. They still longed for the splendor and visible glory of the Jewish temple and ritual. The traditions of their fathers concerning Moses and Aaron, and the whole of that ancient dispensation, had for them a halo of glory round about it. It was hard for them to see in Jesus Christ of Nazareth, rejected and crucified of men, the fulfillment of prophecy, the antitype of the Mosaic ritual and the climax of Divine revelation. Do not many of us still share in the same feeling? It is the miraculous, or the sensuous, emotion, the extravagance in doctrine, the strange, the marvelous, that arrests the attention of many of us. We do not see the infinitely greater revelation of God in the purity, the tenderness, the humility, the goodness, the love, the patience, of the Christian life.

If this Christmas time can bring to us a deeper sense of the simplicity of the revelation of God in Christ, and of His revelation in us, His brethren, it will be the best of all Christmas times to us. I do not care much about any material conception of the kind of throne Jesus Christ sits upon, nor about any splendor that in any way could appeal to the senses, but I care everything about how much He has in common with me, and how much I have in common with Him.

NOTES FROM NEW YORK CITY.

A very interesting two days and a half meeting has just been held in the Friends' meeting house, in New York, in connection with the winter meeting of the representatives and of various committees of the yearly meeting. On Third-day afternoon, J. Wilbur Chapman and Robert E. Speer addressed a public meeting, the former speaking on "The Baptism with the Holy Spirit," and the latter on "The Need of Bible Study." The simplicity, comprehensiveness and power of the first address were quite above the usual presentation of even this theme. In the evening, Rufus M. Jones read a very able paper on "The Attitude of the Modern Christian Toward the Bible." A conference of ministers and Christian workers was held at 9.30 on Fourth-day morning, led by Mary S. Knowles. Interesting questions connected with life and service were discussed. M. M. Binford gave an address on "The Four Gospels," suggestive of lines of study for the coming year. At the meeting of the Home and Foreign Mission Board, on Fourth-day afternoon, interesting reports were received from the work among the Indians; the work at High Point, N. C.; among the colored people; the Girls' School, at Victoria, Mexico, and of the departure of George De Voll, M.D., for China. Mary Pickett was accepted as a teacher for the Girls' School at Victoria. The Board decided to co-operate with other yearly meetings in supporting missionary work in Cuba, under the care of the American Friends' Board of Foreign Missions.

In the evening, at the monthly meeting for New York, we had the company of several ministers, whose presence and service were most acceptable. H. R. Keates, Lindley Stevens, John B. Garrett and others engaged in vocal service. Meals were served in the lunch room of the meeting house during the two days, thus affording much opportunity for social intercourse, which was fully appreciated.

We learn that W. Irving and Anna Kelsey have been obliged to return to the United States temporarily, on account of the serious illness of the latter. She is now at the Presbyterian Hospital, in Chicago. Let us pray for her speedy recovery.

News from the Field.

S. Edgar Nicholson, who is well known to Friends as author of the Nicholson Law of Indiana, and as Chairman of the last Indianapolis Conference, has moved from his home in Kokomo, Indiana, to Baltimore, Md. He is superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of Maryland. His address is 116 West Mulberry Street, Baltimore, Md.

Anna J. Winslow, who has been for some time in Jefferson County, Kansas, has moved back to her old home at Mount Ayr, Osborne County, Kansas.

A large number of the ministers in New York Yearly Meeting were in New York city for the Representative Meeting, committee meetings and the two days' Bible Conference last week.

The statement made in Harlow Lindley's article, "The Origin and Growth of Education among Friends in Western Indiana," that Rush Creek School cost $8,650, was a misprint. It was spoken of as a small log school house, and the cost should have been given as $86.50, but the period was omitted. Jesse T. Turner's remarks on this subject, in last week's issue, were made without this knowledge.

MISSIONARY LITERATURE NOTES.

A new edition of "What Part Have I?" by Ethel Kirk Calvert, has recently been made. It is a good tract, showing our personal responsibility for the evangelization of the heathen. Price 2 cents each; 10 cents a dozen.

Two new tracts, "Give Ye Them to Eat" and "Tell it Again," come from the pen of Delia Fistler, of Nowgong, India. They relate interesting incidents of her life there, and are worth the price—1 cent each; 10 cents a dozen.

The "Home Life Series" are good tracts, published by the Presbyterians. They describe the home life in ten countries—Africa, China, Hawaii, India, Japan, Korea, Mexico, Persia, Siam and South America. They are 2 cents each.

The above may all be ordered of Flora P. Mills, Knightstown, Indiana.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING.

Ackworth Quarterly Meeting of Friends was held at Motor, Iowa, on the 17th, 18th and 19th of Eleventh month. It was very small on Sixth-day in the Meeting of Ministry and Oversight. On Seventh-day, also, the meeting was small, considering our membership, but it was a good meeting. Beside our own ministers, we had the company of William J. Thornberry, of Ohio, who preached two sermons, on Seventh-day and on First-day, to good satisfaction.

STEPHEN MOSHER.

Salem Quarterly Meeting of Friends was held at Salem, Iowa, from the 24th to the 26th of Eleventh month, 1899. A Doctrinal Conference was held at 10 a.m. It was a satisfactory time. Jacob Hinshaw delivered a strong discourse on the dangers of higher criticism. Some other subjects were well discussed. The meeting on Ministry and Oversight, at 2 o'clock, was not so well attended. On Seventh-day, the 25th, the meeting for worship, at 10 a.m., was well attended. At 1.30 p.m. a meeting for business was held. We had the company of J. Morris Lemon, a minister from Oskaloosa Quarter, whose company and gospel labors were well-received and cheering to all. On First-day the meeting was very large and attentive. Brother Lemon goes, in a few days, to Kansas, for a winter's work as an evangelist.

JOHN M. CORSBIE.

Jesse Lloyd commenced a series of meetings at West Branch, following our quarterly meeting, on the 5th and 6th of Eleventh month, and continued day after day until the night of the 26th. I think I can truly say, in the forty-five years of my sojourn here this place has never had such a continuous shower of Bible truth. His ministry is in the demonstration of the Spirit and of power. Every meeting in Iowa Yearly Meeting would be blessed by his ministry if they are willing to receive the Bible testimony.

Brother Lloyd went to Prairieville, where his wife is spending the winter.

J. Y. HOOVER.

Marshalltown, Iowa.—For the third time in its history Bangor Quarterly Meeting was held in Marshalltown, Eleventh month 25th and 26th. All the sessions proved to be occasions of blessings. Prof. John J. Hadley, now of New Providence, but formerly of Le Grand, in an able sermon in the devotional meeting, on Seventh-day morning, based on Hebrews 2, preached in defence of the authenticity of the story of the Garden of Eden and of the fall of man, as against the tendency of some to hold up this "beginning" story in the light of mere legend, and brought out some peculiarly interesting thoughts:

(1.) "Though we may not know," he said, "just how much the angels knew of God's forecast of the plan of salvation; with what interest they watched the race when reduced to 'eight souls' floating in the ark upon the deep waters of the flood; how much they foresaw of the development of man—they did know salvation—that a Saviour was given to men when Jesus made His advent, or they could not have sung their hallelujah song, 'Glory to God in the Highest.'"

(2.) Scientists, critics and evolutionists may take away all they may from the Bible—two things they must leave us: the cross of Christ and pentecost.

(3.) That as the fall of man affected even the animal and vegetable world, so also will the atonement affect all things, animate and inanimate.

Though important measures came before the business session, all were disposed of in a Christian spirit and good fellowship. The evening meeting was very full in attendance and a time of spiritual uplift. A sweet solemnity came over the First-day morning meeting, with the spirit of prayer resting upon the congregation, which seemed to prepare the way for the practical and impressive sermon by Z. L. Martin, superintendent of Pastoral and Evangelistic Work, drawn from the grave question, "Where art Thou?"

The evening session, a very fitting one, gave evidence that interest, from beginning to finish, had steadily increased.

The preaching of the evening was shared by Z. L. Martin and J. L. Bean. Both pointed out with fervency of spirit the essential conditions of successful evangelistic work.

CANADA YEARLY MEETING.

Pelham Quarterly Meeting of Friends, held at Norwich, Ontario, Canada, the 18th and 19th of Eleventh month, 1899, opened on Sixth-day afternoon with the Meeting of Ministry and Oversight. Elwood Scott, of Carthage, Ind., was with us and spoke well on our being encouraged to press forward; that while (taking his thought from the book of Nehemiah) there was much rubbish, yet the Lord was on our side. Several others took part, and the meeting was felt to be one of edification. Seventh-day Mary E. Scott and R. H. Rogers, of Fort Hill, addressed the meeting, and in the business that followed the minute of E. Scott's attendance at this quarterly meeting just twenty-five years ago was read, bringing to our remembrance the many changes that have taken place since then and of the many that have been called into the presence of the King. Seventh-day evening the Bible School Conference was held. R. H. Rogers read an excellent paper on the "Inspiration of the Bible," showing from the eternal evidence of the book itself and the result upon those who believe its message, its Divine origin, that it is indeed inspired of God. A questioner followed, in which, questions on different subjects in the Bible being distributed, answers were called for and caused a good deal of interest. E. Scott then gave a powerful address on the Bible—that it must be true, because of its teaching and because of the results that followed to them that believe.

The meetings on First-day were well attended, and the preaching was with power and profit. All felt thankful for the company of our friend, Elwood Scott, and we are looking forward to having him with us at the beginning of the year in revival work if the Lord will.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING.

William Elwood Mills has severed his connection with the Hesper store, and expects to engage in evangelistic work during the winter.

Benjamin P. Cosand, an aged minister, who formerly lived near Kokomo, Indiana, is in feeble health and confined mostly at home. He still maintains a lively interest in the welfare of the church.

Hesper Academy closed a very successful fall term on the 29th of Eleventh month, and opened the winter term on the 5th of Twelfth month.

We are expecting a series of meetings to commence at Hesper on the third of Twelfth month, to be conducted by J. M. Lemon, of Oskaloosa, Iowa.

Eliza H. Carey, general evangelistic superintendent, recently met with the Executive Committee of the Yearly Meeting's Board, at the home of Eusebia S. Couch.

William J. Davis has just returned from a visit to his old home, near Guilford College, N. C.

Thomas J. Harris returned soon after yearly meeting from an extended trip, in his buggy, through Southern Kansas and Oklahoma. He traveled over eighteen hundred miles, attended thirty meetings and visited about six hundred families.

Hesper Quarterly Meeting was held on the 2d, and was well attended. It was a blessed meeting. J. Morris Lemon, from Iowa; Eliza H. Carey and Lydia M. Chase, were in attendance.

COFFEE THE CAUSE OF HEART TROUBLE.

"Three cases of heart trouble that have been relieved by stopping coffee and taking Postum Food Coffee, have come under my notice. First, my own case. I suffered greatly from palpitation and irregularity of the heart. My physician ordered me to leave off coffee, and when I took up Postum Food Coffee in its place, the heart trouble was soon entirely cured, and I find the Postum to be just as the doctor said, 'not only harmless, but very beneficial.'"

"A gentleman friend had much the same trouble with his heart. I suggested that he try Postum. After the first cup at breakfast, he said, 'I don't want any more of it.' Inquiry proved that it had not been properly boiled, so I prepared a cup for him, strictly according to directions, and he pronounced it 'delicious' and 'better than coffee.' Mrs. —, of Paducah, suffered much the same way, and has had the same experience in recovering from heart trouble by the discontinuance of coffee and taking up the use of Postum. For private reasons, I request that you withhold my name from publication." —, Princeton, Ky.

News and Events.

The President's message was read in both branches of Congress on the 5th. It referred to the present prosperous condition of the country and the Treasury, declaring that the present is an auspicious time in which to perfect financial legislation. The President advocates measures for the encouragement of American shipping, and says that trusts should early receive the attention of Congress. Attention is called to the lynchings of foreigners, and other lawless acts within our border. Upon the subject of Cuba the President declares that the pledge contained in the resolution adopted by Congress at the outbreak of the war with Spain, disclaiming any intention to exercise permanent sovereignty over Cuba should be sacredly kept. Reference is made to the success of the National Export Exposition and the Commercial Congress held in Philadelphia. Concerning the acquisition of the Philippine Islands, the President declares that the outbreak was the result of the sinister ambition of a few leaders. He says that he believed when he instructed the Peace Commissioners to negotiate for the acquisition of the islands he was meeting the wishes of the great majority of the Filipino people to be freed from the Spanish yoke. He denies that Aguinaldo was promised independence, and says that he had planned to massacre all the white people in Manila, irrespective of nationality. To have withdrawn from the islands, the President says, would have submitted its people to worse bloodshed than has resulted from the insurrection.

Cablegrams from Cape Town, received in London, report a desperate fight at Stormberg, Cape Colony, between 3,000 British troops, led by General Gatacre, on his way to the support of Lord Methuen's army, advancing to Kimberley. Gatacre was misled by his guides, fiercely attacked and compelled to retire. The British list of killed and wounded is a large one, and 630 officers and men are reported missing. This reverse is not considered serious, but the encouragement which the Boers will derive from their victory will undoubtedly render the undertaking of the British more difficult and drawn out.

It was reported at Manila, on the 10th, that General Alejandrino and staff have surrendered to General MacArthur. Major Spence, with a column of the Thirty-second Regiment, has captured a new insurgent camp in the mountains, ten miles from Dinalupan, northwest of Manila Bay, General Gregorio del Pilar, commanding Aguinaldo's bodyguard, was killed by Major March's battalion of the Thirty-third infantry in a fight northwest of Cervantes, on the 3d inst.

The opening of Congress, on the 4th, was witnessed by a very large throng of people. Great interest is centered in the present session. The credentials of M. S. Quay, as Senator from Pennsylvania, were presented by Senator Penrose, and were then referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. Protests against the seating of Quay were presented by Senators Burrows and Jones, of Arkansas. In the House, General David B. Henderson was elected Speaker. When the members were sworn in, Roberts, of Utah, approached the bar, but objections being made to the administration of the oath, he was requested to step aside, with the understanding that such action did not prejudice his rights. A resolution was then presented by Taylor, of Ohio, appointing a special committee of nine to consider the Roberts case before he shall be permitted to take the oath of office. On the day following this resolution was adopted by a vote of 302 to 30. In the meantime, pending the report of the committee, Roberts is to be excluded from a seat in the House. In the opening session no less than eight hundred and sixty-one bills and thirty resolutions were introduced.

COMPOSITION ON BREATHING.

A boy fourteen years old, who was told to tell all he could about breathing in a composition, handed in the following: "Breath is made of air. We breathe with our lungs, our lights, our liver and kidneys. If it wasn't for our breath we would die when we slept. Our breath keeps the life a-going through the nose when we are asleep. Boys that stay in a room all day should not breathe. They should wait till they get outdoors. Boys in a room make bad, unwholesome air. They make carbonic acid. Carbonic acid is poisoner than mad dogs. A heap of soldiers was in a black hole in India, and a carbonic acid got in that there hole and nearly killed every one afore morning. Girls kill the breath with corsists, that squeeze the diagram. Girls can't holler or run like boys, because their diagram is squeezed too much. If I was a girl I had rather be a boy, so I can run and holler and have a big diagram."

COLD OR HOT?

Cold or hot, my friend? Feel your spiritual pulse and see. Put the Bible thermometer under your tongue. Search your heart and see how much love for Christ is left there. If, after such an honest examination, you find that the temperature has run low, very low—what then? Should you quit the church and throw up your Christian profession? No! a thousand times, no. The Holy Spirit's message to you is, "Be zealous, therefore, and repent." The only way to repent of sin is to quit it. The only way to warm a chilled frame is not to throw yourself into a snow bank, but to hasten to the fire. Come back to a deserted Saviour! Instead of erasing your blurred name from the church registry, seek a reconversion.

Simon Peter's best work was done after he was reconverted. Do not stop with lamenting your neglect of the place of prayer. Open again the door of devotion and go in and throw yourself down at the Master's feet, and cry out, "I have sinned."

CHRIST VISIBLE TO THE EYE OF FAITH.

We are reminded of this profound, spiritual truth by reading the following account of an occurrence, which illustrates an impressive scientific fact touching the visible: "Photographs of the invisible are what M. Zenger calls two pictures which he took about midnight of August 17th, from a window looking out upon the Lake of Geneva. They gave faint, yet distinct images of the lake and of Mont Blanc, which could not be seen in the darkness. Mr. Nertrand remarks that invisibility is a relative term, the significance of which depends on the power of the observer's eye. The photographs were taken with a light of very small intensity, and did not represent an invisible object. So sky photographs taken in observatories show stars which cannot be discerned by the most piercing vision.—"The Preachers' Helper."

A BLIND LETTER.

Miscellaneous correspondence is a heavy burden upon public men. They are bombarded with letters from admirers and critics alike. To answer unnecessary communications is to court a continuance of the evil. The argument was long urged upon the late Bishop of Wakefield, England, who felt it to be part of his duty to answer every letter he received, even though its writer was evidently insane.

On this last score the bishop's friends protested vigorously, but the good man replied:

"Well, poor things, I don't fancy many people write to them, and perhaps my letters give them a little pleasure."

Occasionally a perfectly sane letter gave the recipient more trouble than the most elaborate effusion of a crazed mind. The bishop's son and biographer prints a sample communication exactly reproduced.

"May it please your Lordship,

"To inform me my Lord whether I have a Legal Right to a Grave or not, supposing my Grandfather on my Mother's side, my Lordship, and the said Grandfather had no son, and my mother was the eldest daughter and I am my Mother's Oldest Child and only Son, my Lordship, who would, become into possession of the said Grave my Lordship, supposing my Father loses my Mother, my Lordship, has he a Legal Right to bury my Mother, in the said Grave, if it is not left, in the aforesaid, Grandfather's Will, my Lordship, hasn't the aforesaid grandfather's Grandson the Legal Right of the said Grave, my Lordship, has a Son-in-law a Legal Right, before a Grandson, to the said Grave, my Lordship, has my sister a Legal Right to have my Father buried in the same Grave, my Lordship, without the consent of her Brother, my Lordship, is that Grave invested with Vicar's Rights, so that no one can interfere with the said Grave, my Lordship, the said Grave has a Head Stone on it and there was a certain amount of Fees to be paid, before, the said Vicar allows the said stone to be put over the Grave, my Lordship, would not that Grave devolve and become Freehold Property, my Lordship, may it please your Grace to send me a reply.

"From yours truly,

"____."

The letter was deciphered, and the anxious inquirer got his reply.

"AN OVER TRUE TALE."

The preacher is a man, say, in the forties, at his best physically, intellectually, spiritually, full of executive force and ability, says Alfred Brown, Layman, in the December "Atlantic." He has a half-dozen children. For ten, fifteen years he held a prominent pastorate, and did strong work in it. But under the restless spirit of the age, his congregation begins to long for a new voice and novel methods. A man who appeals to the craving for sensational preaching comes into his neighborhood. His congregations diminish. His people love their pastor, but they become uneasy. He learns the fact; fears to bring dissension into the church which he loves; and, with fine disregard of all personal interest, and with the spirit which impels a man leadership of a church, but short cuts to large congregations. A few months of this, and the preacher suddenly awakens to find that he is no longer sought by pulpit committees. His name is no longer considered, because he has been out of a pastorate for several months.

Now to his tent-making or to the piteous humiliation of a man without a life work, with his family scattered, the plans for his children's education unrealized, his self-respect tortured, his heart broken. In the battle of life the brave man and the true has lost the day. He is accounted a failure at the very hour when he has reached the full height of his capacity and power.

When he resigned, a theological professor said to him, "Don't you know what a risk you are running?" He knew something of "the risk." Had he known it all he would have chosen no different course. He preaches here and there, but always finds that other men have been heard before him or are to be heard after him, and that the church is not ready to reach a decision. When the calls are extended, he notices that they go to younger men, and generally to men who have reached immediate and showy results by artificial and ungentle methods. becomes a pleasing occupation, provided it was stitched on a Singer Automatic. The elastic seam made by this machine is perfectly safe when locked, but can be taken apart in an instant when unlocked. Thus its use is especially desirable for the clever woman who wishes to make over a garment so that it may conform to the changing styles. Whether in the hands of the amateur or the expert, this simple bit of mechanism is the most convenient and effective of any.

Having all the advantages claimed for other "automatic" sewing machines, the Silent Singer has many points of preference that can easily be demonstrated by comparison. Of faultless construction and finish, it is absolutely the lightest-running, the simplest and most compact. It is more easily threaded, and its parts are better protected from dust. The broad treadle better promotes the health and comfort of the operator, because it is lower and the position of the feet can be changed at will. These points are worthy careful consideration by those of delicate health or unaccustomed to continuous use of a sewing machine.

GROWING A GRANDMOTHER.

He was a wee little man, only three years old, but very brave, courageous and uncomplaining—more courageous than any one knew, for though he was only a baby, he had trials to bear, says the New York "Times." The family had gone to a new country in the far West, the mamma, this little man and the sister, a little older.

It was a very new country, very different from the city in the East, where they had left many friends, relatives, and nearest of all, a dear old grandmother. The mamma was so busy in her new home that she had little time to devote to the babies except to see that they were clean and well fed. So the little ones were lonesome sometimes, as mamma found out one day in a way that brought tears to her eyes.

The little three-year-old had been very busy and very quiet, making a big hole in the ground with such earnestness of purpose that, fearing the little fellow was planning some mischief, she went to see what was being done. The hole was completed when she reached the spot, and in it had been placed something that she took out and examined with wondering curiosity. It was the strangest thing to go into a hole in the ground—an old daguerreotype, a picture of the dear grandmamma at home.

"Why, baby," exclaimed mamma, "what are you doing with this?"

"I fought," said the little man, with a quivering lip and all the pent up loneliness of homesickness in his voice as he tried to explain—"I fought, maybe, if I planted it, anozer grandma would grow."

READY TO DIE OR TO LIVE.

Dying is an important incident in one's life. Yet living is more important than dying. Many a man who would have been mourned, and whose memory would have been now held in honor if he had died five years ago, or ten, then seemed ready to die—but he was not ready to live. He is not honored now; he will not be mourned when he dies. We ought to be ready to die, but, what is more, we ought to be ready to live. If we are ready to live, we

Fore-planned, the lines all fitly blend.

My puny piece-work disappears,—
Atomic, lost to sight.
And when aloft thy fabric rears
Its towers to the light,
No graceless man-work mars its wall;
In mercy Thine hath rounded all!

We cannot always be doing a great work, but we can always be doing something that belongs to our condition. To be silent, to suffer, to pray when we cannot act, is acceptable to God. A disappointment, a contradiction, a harsh word, an annoyance, a wrong received and endured as in His presence, is worth more than a long prayer; and we do not lose time if we bear its loss with gentleness and patience, provided the loss was inevitable, and was not caused by our own fault.—Fenelon.

A HINDOO NOBLEMAN.

T. B. Pandian, of Madras, India, a Hindoo nobleman, is visiting this country in the interest of the outcast people of Hindoostan, about whom the British Consul, Wilfred Powell, stationed in Philadelphia, says: "I have the pleasure to state that I have examined the documents handed to me by T. B. Pandian, Parooranie Samni, of Madras, and find that they are to be depended upon, and that he is visiting this country in the interests of the Pariah, or backward classes, of India (E. I.), and is deserving of all help and consideration.

T. B. Pandian is an author, and his work has been highly appreciated by Western scholars. "The Indian Village Folk," a graphic description of the inner life of India, is furnished with a suitable preface from the pen of the venerable William Sinclair, Archdeacon of London. "The Slaves of the Soil" is introduced by J. E. Vedanayagam Pillia, Professor of English History of the Church of Scotland, Mission College, Madras, and by Professor G. U. Pope, of Oxford University, some time Fellow of the Madras University and member of the Royal Asiatic Society, and German Oriental Society. These books, published in English, have enjoyed a wide circulation. They are also published in the continental languages. T. B. Pandian's "English Pictures from Indian Camera" is worthy of its name.

T. B. Pandian embraced Christianity several years ago, and has since actively engaged in its mission of love. In the natural progress of his life and work his sympathies were drawn to the condition of the most suffering and helpless children of India, called Pariahs, the poor, emaciated, ill-fed, half-naked, ignorant, suffering slaves of the soil, who are prevented from walking upon God's earth and drinking of its water and breathing of His air. Twenty long centuries of oppression have made the Pariah a coward, and the long ages of slavery have made him an idiot.

The main difficulties of the Pariahs are the school question, the land question and water question. The Pariah children are not allowed to attend the public schools on account of the painful system of caste. Now the Indian Government has opened 300 primary schools for the use of the Pariahs, and the Pariahs can now hold land without difficulty. The most crying need of the Pariah is for water. In the extreme heat of India he has to go for miles to get what water he may find in the ditches, filled with the germs of cholera and other diseases. Who can describe the sufferings of this unfortunate people who are denied access to the public wells? T. B. Pandian waited six years upon the government, which is handicapped for want of money.

Of course, India belongs to England, and it is her duty to care for India; but the suffering Pariahs belong to the universal brotherhood of man, and he has every right to appeal to American generosity as a suffering brother, and we are sure our sympathy will be drawn towards him.

Let any man be of good cheer about his soul who has ruled his body and delighted in knowledge in this life; who has adorned the soul in her own proper jewels, which are temperance, justice, courage, nobility, and truth. In these arrayed, the soul is ready for the journey even to another world, when the time comes. For, if death be the journey to another place, and there all the dead are, what good can be greater than this? Be of good cheer about death, and know this of a truth, that no evil can happen to a good man either in life or after death. God orders and holds together the whole universe, in which are all things unimpaired, unconfused, undecaying, obeying His law swifter than thought, and in perfect order.—Socrates.

What a strength and spring of life, what hope and trust, what glad, unresting energy, is in this one thought,—to serve Him who is "my Lord," ever near me, ever looking on; seeing my intentions before He beholds my failures; knowing my desires before He sees my faults; cheering me to endeavor greater things, and yet accepting the least; inviting my poor service, and yet, above all, content with my poorer love. Let us try to realize this, whatever we be. The humblest and the simplest, the weakest and the most encumbered, may love Him not less than the

By RUFUS M. JONES, Litt.D.

This is a collection of short, practical articles on important religious subjects. It deals with questions which every thinking man must meet in a practical way, and it contains a positive message for the times. In these fifty-three essays many of the most important phases of the spiritual life receive consideration, and the notes of hope and victory, and faith in the overcoming life, are everywhere manifest. It is a book which should appeal to all classes of Christians. The book also contains a suggestive chapter on "The Message of Quakerism."

12mo. 208 pages. Oxford laid paper. Bound in extra silk cloth, gilt top. Price, $1.00.

Quaker Poems.

A Collection of Verse relating to the Society of Friends, gathered from all Sources, and edited, with Introduction and Notes, by Charles Francis Jenkins.

About Sixty poems on a great variety of subjects, from about fifty authors, illustrative of the principles of the Society—its history, personelle, associations, customs, etc. There are selections from Whittier, Bayard Taylor, Holmes, Longfellow; while the English poets are represented by Charles Lamb, William Wordsworth, Robert Southey, William Howitt, Bernard Barton and others.

Forty Illustrations: Portrait of George Fox, from the painting by Sir Peter Lely; also, portraits of William Penn, Whittier, John Bright, Joseph Gurney, and of other well-known Friends to whom poems refer. Also, pictures of many places of historical interest referred to in the text.

Nearly 300 pages, large 12mo, well-printed on good paper, neatly bound in cloth, gold side lettering and design, $1.25. Will be sent postpaid on receipt of price.

Our Red Brothers

AND THE

Peace Policy of President Ulysses S. Grant.

By LAWRIE TATUM, formerly United States Indian Agent.

A most interesting book relating to the history and customs of the Indians, written by one who has spent much time with "Our Red Brothers," and who is well equipped for the task he has undertaken. "The prime motive for writing this volume has been to record some important items of history in connection with the Indians and the overruling providence of God, and to show that 'the Peace Policy' in dealing with the Indians, which commenced in 1869, has proved a great blessing to them, to the government, and to people of the nation."

Containing 366 pages, well printed on good paper, neatly bound in cloth, with gold lettering on side and back. Sixteen full page half-tone engravings.

Price, $1.25.

THE LIFE AND LETTERS OF Elizabeth L. Comstock,

Compiled by her sister, C. HARE,
WITH PORTRAIT.

This interesting book consists largely of extracts from letters written and received by Elizabeth L. Comstock during her long sojourn in America. Her experiences in visiting prisons, asylums, hospitals, etc., during the time of the American war, are most graphically described, and form interesting reading. Her visits to England and Ireland form part of the concluding chapters.

12mo. Cloth. 580 pp. With portrait.
Price, $1.50.

An American Story by

RICHARD H. THOMAS, M.D.

Author of "Echoes and Pictures," "A History of the Society of Friends in America," etc. Preface by W. C. Braithwaite, B.A., LL.B.

Five original full-page illustrations.

The story is intended to portray home life among the Society of Friends in the Eastern Middle States, in its influence upon a serious-minded man, fresh from the New York world and agnostic in his faith.

"SEE WHAT A LOVELY SHELL."

See what a lovely shell,
 Small and pure as a pearl,
 Lying close to my foot,
 Frail, but a work divine,
 Made so farily well.
 With delicate spire and whorl,
 How exquisitely minute,
 A miracle of design!
 What is it? A learned man
 Could give it a clumsy name.
 Let him name it who can,
 The beauty would be the same.
 The tiny cell is forlorn,
 Void of the little living will
 That made it stir on the shore.
 Did he stand at the diamond door
 Of his house in a rainbow frill?
 Did he push, when he was uncurled,
 A golden foot or a fairy horn
 Thro' his dim water-world?
 Slight, to be crushed with a tap
 Of my finger-nail on the sand,
 Small, but a work divine;
 Frail, but of force to withstand,
 Year upon year, the shock
 Of cataract seas that snap
 The three-decker's oaken spine
 Athwart the ledges of rock,
 Here on the Breton strand!

—Alfred Tennyson, in "Maud."

A History of Quaker Government in Pennsylvania

By ISAAC SHARPLESS, LL.D., President of Haverford College.

Volume II.—THE QUAKERS IN THE REVOLUTION.

The first part of this work, under the title of "A Quaker Experiment in Government," was published in the Spring of 1898, and met a warm reception from press and public, and a ready sale. It carried the narrative from the founding of the Commonwealth down to the year 1756, when the conflict between the peace principles of the Quakers and the warlike trend of events first reached a crisis. The present volume traces the same conflict through the stormy events of the Revolution, and examines its momentous results.

A Handbook of Labor Literature.

Compiled by HELEN MAROT.

The need of such a work as this, and the place which it must fill, have been brought to the attention of the compiler in the course of her work, as the founder and librarian of the Free Library of Economics and Political Science, Philadelphia. The constantly-increasing volume and complexity of the literature on this subject have made it almost impossible even for specialists to keep abreast of its various growths. It is a branch of inquiry which is increasingly attracting public attention, and on which intelligent advice is increasingly sought. It is as a help to the giving of such advice, and a direct guide to the general reader, that this work has been compiled.

"Will take rank beside the best bibliographies on German and French literature in the same field. Nothing comparable with it has preceded it in English."

—Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science.

"I fail to see how the book could be substantially improved except by enlargement. . . . On the whole the work is admirable."

—C. H. HASTINGS in American Journal of Sociology.

Pauperizing the Rich.

By ALFRED J. FERRIS.

A "suggested solution of this modern problem of the Sphinx which confronts the twentieth century," as it is called in an appreciative review in the (London) Friend.

It contains a discussion of the merits and demerits of our social system which does not belong in any of the recognized classes. It is neither anarchistic nor socialistic, nor does it uphold the Single Tax, the People's Party, or the Free Silver propaganda; yet it contains an unsparing arraignment of the present regime, and proposes as a corrective a measure of reform which is not lacking in radicalism.

"A wholesome critique on some conventional ideas both of charity and of justice."—The Outlook (New York).

"A very readable, popularly-written discussion. . . . interesting and suggestive."—N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

"A thoroughly fresh and interesting discussion of our social and economic difficulties."—Chicago Tribune.

"It is an ambitious and radical programme, but the author urges it with an ingenuity and logic that are fascinating. . . . It is interesting and at the same time stimulating."—Pittsburg Times.

"A very telling argument."—Springfield Republican.

"A smart bit of satire."—Spectator (London).

Illustrated Symbols and Emblems

By H. J. SMITH, Designer in Stained Glass.

A complete Manual of Sacred Symbolism. It contains one hundred magnificent full-page quarto plates, illustrating over three hundred and fifty symbols, each plate being accompanied by one or more pages of explanatory letter-press. The descriptions are comprehensive, but simple and terse, making it an invaluable working manual. An indispensable book for all architects, designers, and draughtsmen, and for workmen in the artistic, decorative, and high-class building trades.

The author, an eminent designer in stained glass, has been impressed with the fact that in art education of our day the subject of Symbolism seems to have been overlooked. "Very little direct instruction upon it seems to be given in the art schools, and graduates are left to learn at haphazard or to guess at the meaning of the symbols that are used so lavishly in our churches." The reason for this general neglect is to be found in the fact that the many works on the subject were written by and for the theologian and the archaeologist, and are too abstruse to be used as works of popular reference.

Illustrated circular and sample pages sent on application.

LITTLE TOWN OF BETHLEHEM.

*O little town of Bethlehem, how still we see thee lie;
Above thy deep and dreamless sleep, the silent stars go by.
Yet in thy dark street shineth the everlasting Light,
The hopes and fears of all the years are met in thee tonight.*

For Christ is born of Mary, and gathered all above, While mortals sleep, the angels keep their watch of wondering love.

*O morning stars together, proclaim the holy birth,
And praises sing to God the King, and peace to men on earth!*

*How silently, how silently, the wond'rous gift is given,
So God imparts to human hearts the blessings of His Heaven.*

*No ear may hear His coming, but in the world of sin,
Where meek souls will receive Him still, the dear Christ enters in.*

*O holy Child of Bethlehem, descend to us, we pray,
Cast out our sin and enter in; be born in us to-day.
We hear the Christmas Angels the great glad tidings tell,
O come to us, abide with us, O Lord Emmanuel.*

A VISION.

Was it the voice of the Night-wind—
A vision from dreamland sent—
That fell through the lonely twilight hush,
With musical echoes blent?

A picture glowed in the shadows,
With the mystic light of the past;
Like a breathing presence it thrilled the sense,
Till the quickened pulse beat fast.

The form that stood before me
Was the one that Hope had planned.
In the glowing realm of Fancy's dream,
I had wrought it with eager hand.

'Twas my life, as I'd hoped to live it,
With aims that were earnest and true;
And it passed through paths I had longed to tread,
With the deeds I had longed to do.

Then a voice broke the throbbing silence—
"Weep not that you see no more
The dream that has passed to the future's grasp—
It has only gone before."

The fading vision has vanished;
Down the silent night it has passed;
But the golden keys by Memory kept
Are mine while life shall last.

CHRIST IN BETHLEHEM AND HERETO-DAY.

There is much that is out of joint in our world—much that jars and grates—and it is easy to grow blue and sick as one thinks of the sad and bad side of humanity—but God loves men! This is our Christmas message; this is what Christmas means. It is the world's day of joy, and it will be kept in homes in every habitable country on the globe. Its meaning and its power will touch the hearts of the soldiers in the Philippines, and Boer and Englishman, for this day at least, will feel the spell of this recurring anniversary of the dawn of peace and love.

Subscribers in Great Britain and Ireland may remit to our agents, Headley Brothers, 14 Bishopsgate Street, Without, London, E. C., England, or directly to this office. Subscriptions and postage, 10s. Payable in advance.

Advertisements, notices and changes of address, should reach the office not later than Seventh-day noon, for the number of the succeeding week. Remittances and letters on business should be addressed to THE AMERICAN FRIEND, 718 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Checks, Money Orders and Postal Notes should be drawn to the order of THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

The strange Southern wild flowers, tinged and stained with human blood, will, for one day at least, make them feel how badly out of harmony their present work is with the song of the angels when the Child came to the Bethlehem manger. Sad it is that we must still go back to the angels' song for our perfect expression of peace. It is the chorus of heaven, and not yet of earth.

But God loves us, and Christ comes to make us know it, not as a theory, but as a glorious fact. More human souls realize this supreme fact on this Christmas day than on any other since the era began. We cannot yet have the joy of seeing peace on earth and a world full of good will. Our happy dream is broken by the bursting of the awful lydite shell, which is more destructive than a whole army of spears when warfare was young. And yet wherever Christ has come into men's hearts and lives the new era of peace and love has begun, and this is prophetic of ultimate triumph.

We must not stop at Bethlehem. Our Christmas must do more than celebrate the birth of a Christ-child who came to a spot of earth "in the days of Cæsar Augustus." Men celebrate this birth and sing the Angelic song, and say their Christian creed, and then go bravely back to their guns and sword and lydite bombs, as though God never meant a thing by this gift of His, and as though no love was manifested. Christ must come to us, and be manifested in us to-day. It is no mere event of the past we celebrate, if we keep Christmas properly. The day should mean not only that Christ came, but that He is here now; not only that God loved, but that He loves now; not only that peace is in heaven, but that it is to be "on earth."

Cæsar Augustus and his Roman Empire are gone. The little rim of civilization which circled the Mediteranean has expanded into realms of the earth, then undiscovered and undreamed of. Christian churches and Christian missionaries have dotted the globe, and human tongues tell over again the song of angels—peace and good will—but we do not yet see the brotherhood and love of man, which were proclaimed over the hills of Judea. And we shall not see them realized until Christians understand that Christ is to be born anew in every one of His followers, and that our lives are to take on His life.

Sadly the disciples say, "We trusted it was he who should redeem Israel, but our hope is blighted." With the pentecost power upon them they realized it was through them and their faithfulness that Israel was to be saved. To-day men treasure up His relics, and talk about His life as though He were not. Let this Christmas be the day which not only commemorates His birth, but may it be the day which deepens and confirms our present apprehension of Him, and which makes us sure of the present love and power of God.

THE CASE OF THE UNSPIRITUALLY RELIGIOUS.

A Friend in a western yearly meeting writes us the following question:

How shall we reach and save a class that attend meetings, sing and testify, and sometimes make a formal prayer, who are good at socials and active at entertainments, even all outward carnal things done, but who seem to have no divine life, and are really looked upon by spiritually-minded people as knowing nothing of a walk with God, or listening to the voice of Christ, so as to know His will, and yet would rule the church and do, to a great extent, so that the carnal prevails, and a round of performances are gone through with without the life and power of Christ.

This is a most important question, and it is an accurate description of a real condition of things in some places. How shall it be met? The real difficulty, of course, is that so many persons think that religious performances are religion. We can remember ourselves how once we thought that "testifying" or praying made a person a Christian. It is exceedingly easy to settle down in the idea that the participation in some religious performance—either joining in the service in church, or sitting in a silent meeting, or speaking in prayer meeting, or adopting some traditional custom—is religion, and often persons who take some such step are said to get religion.

The question is, How shall we reach and save persons who stop in the outward thing, and never go into the life and power of Christ? First of all, we must have clearer, loftier teaching as to what constitutes religion. No Christian teacher ought to leave this point in doubt. If people are satisfied with performances it is because they suppose they can be saved that way, and it is an easy way to get into heaven.

One of the British armies was cut to pieces the other day in South Africa because the guides led them by the wrong road. It was no fault of the soldiers, but they suffered grievously nevertheless. It is impossible to get to victory or to get to heaven by the wrong road. Many will remember the little boy's remark to the gentleman who asked him how far it was to the city of Taunton: "It is twenty-five thousand miles the way you are going; it is five if you turn round." Those who are lulling themselves to rest, or being lulled to rest in the hope of getting to heaven by religious performances of any sort, should hear from some honest voice the "Mene, Mene, Tekel." They need to be shaken out of their false ease at once, as a man needs to be wakened who is sleeping on the edge of a precipice.

A man who has "no divine life" is not saved, no matter what he is doing. If he is "without the life and power of Christ," and has not learned to listen for His voice and to do His will, he is spiritually sick and needs help. It will not cure him to prescribe a course of external performance, for it nowhere hits his case, and it merely makes him forget what he really needs.

What he really needs, and must have, is a new heart, a changed nature, a purified being. He needs to have the divine life begin within him—there is no substitute for that. He needs to realize the life and power of Christ as fact, a power which controls him and qualifies him, and makes him strong and pure. Nothing can take the place of this experience. When the religious life has really begun within, the religious activities will come naturally, spontaneously, and with power, "for we are his workmanship created in Christ unto good works."

THE BRUTALITY OF WAR.

The horrors of war have never been more apparent than in this present South African campaign. For the first time the awful lydite shell has become a regular instrument of destruction. The bursting shell of our Civil War was murderous enough, but the new invention is horrible beyond description. When the shell explodes, it is "warranted" to break into twelve hundred pieces, each of which is hurled with inconceivable force, so that it is estimated that not fewer than three hundred would be killed by one explosion, provided it fell in the midst of an army. We know of no picture of war which so clearly brings out its degrading and brutalizing influences as that given in the "London Times" of what happened at Elands-laagte, as given by an officer:

Our squadrons got right in among them in the twilight, and the most excellent pig sticking ensued for about ten minutes, the bag being about sixty. One of our men, seeing two Boers riding away on one horse, stuck his lance through the two, killing both with one thrust. Had it not been getting dark, we should have killed many more.

It is thus described by one of the war correspondents:

The Dragoon Guards got at them and three times went through them. A corporal who was there tells me the Boers fell off their horses and rolled among the rocks, hiding their heads in their arms and calling for mercy—calling to be shot—anything to escape the stabs of those terrible lances through their backs and bowels. But not many escaped. We just gave them a good dig as they lay. Next day most of our lances were bloody.

It is almost too dreadful to print, but it is only the plain, unembellished story of war. It is impossible to live in the midst of scenes of slaughter and carnage and not lose the kindly traits of human nature. When killing becomes one's regular business, how is he expected to be gentle in his manner of doing it?

EMPHATIC CHRISTIANS.

BY THEODORE L. CUYLER.

The Lord Jesus Christ put great emphasis on the spiritual character of His followers. They were to be sympathetic, and yet separate—or peculiar people, zealous of godly works. They were in the world, and yet not "of the world." Our Master was pre-eminently sympathetic; He touched human life at every point, lofty and lowly. But He did not draw back His foot when a sinful woman's tears of penitence trickled upon it, nor did He refuse an unpopular publican's invitation to be his guest. "This man receiveth sinners," was the sneer of the bigoted Pharisee. It is a bastard Christianity which snubs honest worth in coarse raiment, or refuses to shelter the harlot who is struggling towards a better life, or which builds a "colored pew" in a remote corner of a church gallery.

With all His infinite sympathy—which drew not back from the bitter agonies of the Cross—there was a sense in which Jesus Christ was "separate from sinners." He possessed a Divine holiness, an unworldly spirit, and a spotless life; tempted in all points, He was yet without sin. "Ye are not of the world," He says to His followers, "because I am not of the world." Just here runs the line of separation. It is to be a separation, not of condition or daily contact, but of character. Christ's people are to be a "peculiar people"—peculiar in loving the truth, peculiar in honest dealings, peculiar in works of unselfish benevolence, peculiar in hating sin, and peculiar in trying to copy Him who was holy and undefiled and separate from sinners. "Be ye holy" means to be sound and healthy-hearted; it also means to be set apart to Christ's service. The separation of a genuine Christian must be a separateness of Christly character. All his power for good depends upon it. The heaven is separate even when it mingles itself through the whole batch of meal. The different particles of salt are distinct from the mass of food which they season—i.e., the salt never loses its saltiness.

The more pronounced and emphatic every Christian is in his aloofness from the codes and fashions and the sinful ways of the world, the more peace and spiritual power will he have. He has his standard of faith and practice given to him—to be lived up to. There is an increasing tendency to sneer at creeds. But the all-comprehensive creed which a man must hold to if he be a Christian is—"Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved," and "Faith without works is dead." Straight is the gate that leads to eternal life, and He whose love has opened up that pathway has a right to demand heart-belief in Him and obedience to His commandments. Much of the self-styled "liberal Christianity" is only a thin veneer to cover shallow convictions; it is liberal in pulling down enclosures which the Bible puts up. It is an indistinct blur rather than a belief, and has no spiritual emphasis.

A healthy Christian conscience emphasizes the Divine claims of the Sabbath, and does not rob God of His day. It recognizes the clear, distinct line between sacred time and secular time. That time with some church members is becoming a mere chalk-mark, easily rubbed out. A huge blanket-sheet of a godless newspaper covers the early part of God's day, and its later hours are devoted to social visiting or other secularities. This stealthily and steady undermining of the Sabbath is undermining the Church of Jesus Christ. Christianity cannot live without Divine worship, and worship will not live without the Sabbath. When reverence for God's law is broken down, reverence for human law is shattered also. If the observance of the Fourth Commandment be "Puritanical," then let us have more of it. The salt that has done more to save our country from moral corruption and from the dry-rot of imported errors and vices has been the transmitted virtues of those staunch Puritans who were strict themselves because they served a strict and holy God.

Nothing did our blessed Master emphasize more than non-conformity to the world. Its mammon-worship, its covetousness, its self-indulgences, its frivolities, its soul-destroying influences He protested against. "Be ye not conformed to the world!" Not to be taken out of the world, but to be kept from the evil in the world, was our Saviour's prayer for His people. The power of true, Christly religion is not in assimilation but separation; Christians never will impress or reform or purify a sinful world by agreeing with it. When we go down to the world it drags us lower still; if we yield one mile, it compels us to "go with it twain." We never can save sinners on their own ground; it is only by living on a higher ground, living a separated and Christ-obeying life, that we can hope to lift them to a higher, purer, holier, and thus a happier living. Laxity is the Church's peril. The sorest need of the hour is an emphatic Christianity, an uncompromising Christianity, a Christianity that keeps its conscience clean, that finds its daily law in the Bible, and whose inner life is hid with Jesus Christ in God.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

BENJAMIN WEST AGAIN.

BY MILES WHITE, JR.

The author of the article on Benjamin West, in THE AMERICAN FRIEND for 7th instant, speaks of him as a Friend, and calls a "truthful story," Galt's account of a Friends' Meeting, giving its consent for him to cultivate his talents for art.

Benjamin West was born in Chester County, Pa., and the following extracts, taken from local histories, seem to show that the statements above referred to are erroneous. Gilbert Cope is probably more conversant with Friends' records of Chester County, Pa., than anyone now living, and is believed to be very accurate in his statements.

Dr. George Smith's "History of Delaware County, Pa," Philadelphia, 1862, states, on page 513, that "many details are given by Mr. Galt, his biographer, of the early performances of Benjamin when quite a child, showing the early development of his great natural genius for painting. Some of these are so improbable, and so many of the assertions made by that author are known to be inaccurate, that neither will be repeated here. . . . Of course, everything detailed by Mr. Galt in respect to the action of the Society of Friends in the question of permitting young West to cultivate the faculties with which nature had so liberally endowed him, is perfect fiction. The records show no such action by the Society, and the fact that the artist was not a Friend would exclude them as such from exercising any care over him."

It is stated in Futhey and Cope's "History of Chester County, Pa., Philadelphia, 1881, page 761, that "John West was not a Friend, as represented by Galt and others, during the residence of his gifted son in America, and when he became a member of that Society it was near the close of his life. He arrived in this country in the year 1715, and some time afterwards married Sarah, the daughter of Thomas Pearson, but this marriage was not accomplished according to the good order of the Society of Friends."

Notwithstanding all that has been said by Galt in his life of Benjamin West, in respect to the strict Quakerism of the parents of the great painter, the records of the Society have been searched in vain for any evidence to connect his father with the Society of Friends till the year 1759. In that year "John West, with the approbation of Newtown Meeting," made application to come under the care of Goshen Monthly Meeting of Friends," etc.

As John West's two brothers, who came to America, were Friends, it is possible that he also had been a member of the Society, prior to his first marriage, which is said to have taken place in England; but this is only a supposition based upon the statement in "Encyclopædia Britannica," that Benjamin came "of an old Quaker family who had emigrated from Buckinghamshire."

Baltimore, Twelfth month Ninth.

BENJAMIN WEST AGAIN.

BY AUGUSTINE JONES.

"'Tis very true, my sovereign king,
My skill may weel be doubted;
But facts are chieils¹ that winna² ding³
An downa⁴ be disputed." —Burns

I have read with great interest the paper of Miles White, Jr., of Baltimore, which the editor of THE AMERICAN FRIEND has sent to me, in which he seems bent upon the utter destruction of my recent article upon Benjamin West. It is quite possible that he is correct, that Benjamin West was not a Friend. It is also possible that he and the local historians are mistaken, however improbable that may be. And I cannot test the records of Chester County, Pa., and have no inclination to do so. I gladly admit, on the high authority mentioned by him, and his own, that that record is as he represents it.

My excuse, if I am in error, is a valid one—that most literature, both in England and America, is on my side of it, and I make my escape with the multitude extending from the time of West to the present date.

The learned Dr. Joseph Thomas, a Philadelphia Friend, I believe, in his "Biographical Dictionary," says that West "was a Friend." I have found the same in substance in every dictionary of art, where his religious connection is considered, and in all of the periodical reviews which I have examined. This view has been given to us in our school books, and in the public opinion and speech in which we have been educated from childhood.

This is now to crumble into the dust of the valley, and take its everlasting rest with the story of "William Tell," with the "Hatchet of Washington," which has pointed so many morals, and adorned so many tales. Even Patrick Henry, Pitt, Chesterfield and Walpole did not make their own speeches. And somebody else wrote Shakespeare.

I am inclined to regard that American philosopher as a wise man who taught that "it is better not to know so many things than to know so many that are not so."

Yet, among the things shaken, shattered and sifted, there are a few reflections to be made before the Society of Friends yields its long-cherished claim, that West was one of its gifted sons.

The first is that West himself claimed his Quaker origin up to the day of his death. And it may be reasonably questioned whether the testimony of one honest, trustworthy, living witness is not of more weight than much record, which makes no mention of the fact. One witness who sees or hears a thing is of more weight than many who did not give attention and had no eyes to see. West was the person most interested, most impressed, and had occasion constantly to recur to it, and keep his memory fresh respecting it. And such a Quaker recognition seemed to attend him in English society at large that he must have contributed to it and justified it.

It appears that Galt's "Life of West," which contains all the supposed errors in my former article, was written in 1816, published four years before the death of West, in London, his home; reviewed with much approval by the eminent critic, John Foster, in "Eclectic Review," London, 1817, Vol. 7, N. S., p. 49. Foster says: "Mr. Galt very justly remarks it was necessary the narrative should appear in his (West's) own time, in order that the authenticity of the incidents might not rest on the authority of any biographer." Thus Galt says in effect, and Foster approves of his care and wisdom, that the incidents rest on the authority of West, as if the book were an autobiography. Preface of Galt's "Life of West," p. 8. Galt tells us, in his preface to Part II, that the whole narrative of his book, except the last chapter of the last part, was talked over with West, then written, then given to him to peruse and correct, and when finally written and finished, read over to him for his full approval. So that it rests upon West, particularly as the book was published four years before his decease, and they were undoubtedly warm friends. Cunningham, in his "Lives of the Painters," Vol. II, p. 1, says, "The life of West has been written by the ingenious author of "Annals of the Parish" (Galt) with such minuteness of research and general accuracy of information that little may seem to be left for a new biographer . . . Not only was the president (West) alive when Mr. Galt composed his memoir, but they were intimate friends."

¹Children; ²will not; ³be beaten; ⁴cannot.

Cunningham sets forth West as a Friend, though only by inference, it is true, but he approves of Galt's work, which is to the same purpose.

Shearjashub Spooner, in his "Anecdotes of Painters and Engravers," Vol. I, p. 36-38, quotes Galt with approval, and the same facts presented in my former article are in this and his "Dictionary of Art," where he asserts that West was a Quaker.

I am inclined to think that the evidence in the case, with West himself at the center, and the traditions and literature preponderates in favor of the Quakerism of the great painter, and that some links are missing in the records of Chester County if they fail to record the essential facts. May they not be reconciled by changes of membership or foreign membership? One golden thread of consistency ought to run through the words of West and the record if we could find it.

No one has a greater appreciation of and reverence for facts than the writer, but in the event that the facts of the Friends' Meeting, the beautiful speech of John Williamson, and also the entire story of the dedication to art of West, are annihilated, still the "fiction," parable or story lives. John Williamson's words glow with a logical statement, with an advanced conception of the gifts of God, and with a broad, liberal allowance for His leading and guidance, even at the expense of rigid notions. How admirable! The facts of a story are only pedestal and drapery that hold up the sacred thought, and truth to the view of men. They are themselves no part of the truth.

It strengthens every one of us to entertain the thought that the Friends of Chester County, in the middle of the last century, could entertain such exalted ideas of duty and such prophetic conceptions of the uses of art and beauty. If the facts vanish the ideal lives as immortal as truth herself.

CORRESPONDENCE.

To the Editor of THE AMERICAN FRIEND :

Dear Friend: I notice that in summing up the lesson for Twelfth month 10th, on page 1141, the writer of it says, "The tithe is an Old Testament institution," and then quotes 2 Cor. 9: 7. Does that repeal the law of the tithe? If not, where has it been repealed? The old law said, "The tithe is the Lord's."

Jesus said, Matt. 23: 23, with reference to tithing and leaving undone the weightier matters of the law (substituting the antecedents of "these" and "other"), "Ye ought to tithe the mint and anise and cummin, and not to have left undone judgment and mercy and faith," or "Ye ought to do judgment and mercy and faith, and not to leave undone tithing mint and anise and cummin," according as we shall understand the antecedent of "each" and "other."

Instead of being an "Old Testament institution," tithing was in operation before the law was written; was incorporated in the law; was not a type to be fulfilled in Christ; was never repealed by him; was endorsed by his words, and God's promises concerning it are fully tested and justified in everyday experience.

While neither the Old nor the New Testament limits our financial response unto God to the tithe, there is abundant evidence that it cannot scripturally be less.

I very much regret in the face of the present tendency to tension in the purse-strings, and the consequent suffering of the cause of Christ, that the lesson of the year on giving should be limited to "He seems to require," instead of taking the plain "Thus saith the Lord."

AMOS SANDERS.

William G. Hubbard wrote the following sentence to a friend the other day as he sat by the car window of an express train speeding towards Chicago. It shows the possibilities of the present day:

"As my letter is simply headed, 'On the Wing,' I will be a little more explicit. On Sixth-day afternoon I bought an overcoat at Wanamaker's, in Philadelphia; next morning bought a hat in Harrisburg, and in the evening bought a pair of shoes in Washington, D. C.; preached twice in Washington on Sabbath; breakfasted next morning on top of the Allegheny Mountains; dined in Pittsburg; ate supper in Columbus, Ohio; breakfasted this morning with my children; expect to dine in Indiana and take supper in Chicago, Ill., and breakfast to-morrow in Wisconsin, and dine in Minnesota; stop off at Minneapolis long enough to buy a pair of heavy pants; then stroll leisurely out to Dakota, where I can get a fresh breeze right from the snowy caps of the Rockies; give a few lectures en route; suppress all the bad books I find on my three thousand miles' tour, and be back in Columbus Ohio, to enjoy Christmas turkey at home'."

CORRECTIONS FOR THE DISCIPLINE.

In bottom line of first column, page 1189, insert "of his acceptance" after the word received.

Second paragraph, on page 1194, should begin: "The Quarterly Meeting," etc.

Paragraph 4, Section 1, Chapter 1, Part IV, should be transferred to Section 13, Chapter 5, Part II.

Temperance Department.

[Issued monthly, under the care of the Temperance Association of Friends, of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting. All communications should be addressed to ANNA EASTBURN WILLITS, Editor, Haddonfield, New Jersey.]

"The Outlook," issued monthly for many years by the Temperance Association of Friends of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, and ably edited by a Friend, who now resides in a distant city, has, since her removal, had a precarious existence, with an irregularity of publication. More stringent postal laws caused it to be no longer entered as "second class matter" in the Philadelphia postoffice, and every paper must be stamped. This fact entails an enormous expense, which seems unwarranted, although it reached 4,000 Friends' families, many of whom received no other temperance paper. After solid consideration the Executive Committee has decided to accept Rufus M. Jones's offer of two pages in THE AMERICAN FRIEND once a month, under the charge of the Temperance Association. This department will reach twice the number of readers "The Outlook" had in its most palmy days. Temperance truths will thus be disseminated throughout the East and West, and the field of labor is broader than ever before. Original contributions will be welcomed from Friends everywhere, if brief and upholding the righteousness of temperance and prohibition. All letters addressed to the editor of this department, as above, will receive careful attention.

Joshua L. Baily, of Philadelphia, ever foremost in presenting and promoting the cause of temperance, spoke before "The Ramblers," a literary society of Friends, of Moorestown, N. J., on the 22d of Eleventh month, on "The Canteen."

"A Mothers' Meeting, addressed by a young Friend of Germantown, Pa., was held in a parlor of Haddonfield, N. J., on the 24th of last month. It was conducted by members of the Society of Friends belonging to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. As Friends, we are members of a great religious temperance organization, but if there is a W. C. T. U. in our neighborhood, we would do well to give it our name, our money, our influence, our presence and practical endorsement as far as consistent with our principles.

The Flower Mission work should appeal strongly to Friends. There should be no sadness and sickness and sorrow in the world that ought not receive comfort and ministry from flowers, for they are "God's own messengers." A Friend near Philadelphia, assisted by a few young girls, has sent 1,711 bouquets, with text cards attached, hundreds of pages of good literature, and baskets of fruit, vegetables, jellies, which have been widely distributed the past summer in the "slums," to the sick and suffering, bringing ease and joy and spiritual blessings. Many of the letters received tell of the great good accomplished by these offerings of love and beauty. Friends have always been foremost in suppressing crime and pauperism and intemperance, and the thorough elementary training which their children have always received, has assisted in this direction. Penn wrote to his wife about their children: "For their learning be liberal; spare no costs; for by such parsimony all is lost that is saved."

You who are strong and pure, pray—pray with all your strength and purity for the tempted and fallen ones. You who are yet young, with the power of choosing your life-path, do the good you may find at your own doors. It is not for us all to seek work in the wilderness, but we may attain a mission, embodying our highest ideals, and the Society of Friends will become, in God's Providence, the gathering place of the mighty hosts who profess the name of Christ.

At a regular meeting of the Executive Committee of Philadelphia Friends' Temperance Association, held Eleventh month 27th, 1899, nineteen members were present. The treasurer's report shows a balance of $145.12.

The Literature Committee reported 2,038 pages of temperance literature distributed during the past month.

An effort is being made to secure a suitable reading room for the men at the Twelfth Street Market.

Both coffee stands in Philadelphia are occupied. Stand No. 1 is now feeding more customers than Stand No. 2. They both keep their rent paid, and seem to value the places. The colored man in charge of Stand No. 1 is very energetic and competent. He has a steady custom of colored people, many of whom are just the class for whom the stands are intended—men who are especially tempted to take the free lunch and their drinks at the taverns. The men take the tracts, which are put on the counter for them, and seem to understand that these stands are special places to supply good, cheap lunch in opposition to the saloons.

LIQUOR IN MANILA.

As one result of American occupancy of Manila the liquor business has reached enterprising proportions, and is now considered as one of the leading, as well as one of the respectable kinds of business. Says one correspondent: "On the Escolta, the principal business street, only a quarter of a mile long, there were but two places where intoxicating liquors were sold when we entered the city, whereas, now there are eighteen. There are 300 licensed places in the city where liquors may be obtained, licenses costing $3 per year. The income of the largest, the Alhambra, is stated on good authority to be $700 per night. Already the street cars are topped with large signs detailing the exquisite qualities of certain whiskies. One quarter of the daily issue of the principal English newspaper published is devoted to extolling the perfection of a brand of beer, while the largest drug store in town devotes a whole column to advertising its fine line of liquors, with no mention of its medicines."—"The Wine and Spirit News."

RAINES LAW OF 1687.

The following order was issued by the Mayor's Court "of ye city of Albany," in October, 1687, and is interesting as a sample of the early efforts to control the liquor traffic:

"Whereas ye selling of drink at unreasonable hours at night is founde inconvenient, especially at this juncture of time, ye court doe therefore hereby strictly charge and command yt none of ye inhabitants of this city or county thereof doe presume to sell any drink, beer syder or other liquors to any person whatever after ye Taptoo (taps) upon ye penalty of forfeiting ye somme of tenn shillings every person yt shall be found drinkeing in ye house and if any citizen or inhabitant of this city doe presume to suffer people to drink in their houses any drink fetched from ye tavern or any other place, ye master of yt house shall pay for every person yt shall so admit to drinke in his house after ye Taptoo aforesaid, ye somme of six shillings courant money of this province."—"Albany Argus."

CHRISTIANS AWAKE!

If drinking inevitably leads to a large amount of drunkenness, there can be no neutral position in this question. Every individual who abstains bears his silent but emphatic testimony against the use of alcoholic liquors, whilst every individual who uses them bears his that their use is desirable and proper, and ought to be continued; just as a man who gambles, however moderately, sanctions and supports the custom of gambling, and he who holds a slave, however kindly treated, upholds by the influence of his example, the institution of slavery.

What may be abstractedly lawful, may, under certain circumstances, be most inexpedient and dangerous, and surely, it is contrary to the whole teaching and spirit of Christianity to endanger the welfare and happiness of thousands around us for the sake of our own personal gratification or in subserviency to the customs and fashions of the world. Until religious people are willing to act out this Christian principle in regard to the use of intoxicating drinks, we cannot anticipate much permanent success in battling with this giant evil of intemperance.

We cannot expect the world to go before the church in a matter of self-denial for the good of others, however insignificant the sacrifice may be. The blessing of God has largely rested on the example and labors of the comparatively few who early identified themselves with this mission of mercy, since there are probably millions of persons in this country who are now enjoying the benefits and blessings of total abstinence. We long to see the day when these blessings and benefits shall be extended to the thousands and tens of thousands who are still suffering untold miseries from the effects and consequences of drink, and we trust the time is not far distant when the whole Christian Church will arise in its dignity and power and throw its benign influence on the right side of this momentous question.

The point where temperance ends and intemperance begins never has been and never can be intelligibly defined. Every individual has to decide the point for himself as best he can, but too frequently under circumstances and conditions most unfavorable to a right decision, whilst total abstinence is definite, clear and comparatively easy

It is vain to deplore the evils of intemperance, to denounce those who fall into it, or to pity the sad condition of those who suffer from its fearful effects; this curse of our country will continue to rest upon it so long as the cause remains unremoved. You cannot escape the responsibility of helping either to maintain or to banish the customs of society as to the use of intoxicating liquors upon which the happiness or misery of thousands depends. Upon your decision the present and future well-being of some, possibly of many, depends, and we earnestly entreat you to give that decision in favor of safety and not of danger; of Christian benevolence, and not of self-indulgence; of your country's weal, and not her woe.

SAMUEL BOWLY.

DANGERS OF ALCOHOL.

At the meeting of the Paris Hospital Medical Society M. Legendre, alarmed by the ever-increasing amount of drunkenness, asked if it would not be possible to withstand this by means of meetings, insistence of the dangers of alcohol, and by what he considered an even better method, that of getting up for the instruction of patients lantern shows with exhibitions of anatomic preparations to show the dangers of alcohol. M. Legendre has had printed for the use of all his patients a little leaflet, the text of which runs as follows:

"Most of the diseases treated in the hospitals arise from alcoholic drinks—that is to say, they are either caused or aggravated by the abuse of alcohol. All alcoholic drinks are dangerous, and the most harmful are those which contain aromatics in addition to alcohol—as, for instance, absinth and the so-called aperients, called ainers.

"Alcoholic drinks are more dangerous when taken on an empty stomach or between meals. A man necessarily becomes an alcoholic—i.e., slowly poisoned by alcohol—even if he never gets drunk, when every day he drinks alcohol in the form of liquor or too much wine, more than one liter per diem.

"Alcohol is a poison, the habitual use of which destroys more or less quickly, but none the less certainly, all the organs most necessary to life—the stomach, the liver, the kidneys, the blood vessels, the heart and the brain. Alcohol excites man, but does not strengthen him. It is no substitute for food, but takes away the taste for it. Those who often drink alcohol or too much wine (more than one liter a day) are much more liable to illness, and when ill are much worse, for the disease is often complicated with fatal delirium.

"Alcohol is a frequent cause of consumption by its power of weakening the lungs. Every year we see patients who attend the hospitals for alcoholism come back some months later suffering from consumption. Fathers and mothers who drink often have children who are deformed or idiots, or who die from fits."—"London Lancet."

FOURTH QUARTER

Lesson XIV.

Twelfth month 31, 1899.

REVIEW.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all His benefits.
Psalms 103: 2.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Twelfth mo. 25.—Joyful news. Luke 2: 1-11.
Third-day, Twelfth mo. 26.—Haman's plot against the Jews. Esther 3: 1-11.
Fourth-day, Twelfth mo. 27.—Esther pleading for her people.
Esther 8: 3-8, 15-17.
Fifth-day, Twelfth mo. 28.—Ezra's journey to Jerusalem. Ezra 8: 21-32.
Sixth-day, Twelfth mo. 29.—Nehemiah's prayer. Neh. 1: 1-11.
Seventh-day, Twelfth mo. 30.—Rebuilding the Walls. Neh. 4: 7-18.
First-day, Twelfth mo. 31.—Public Reading of the Scriptures. Neh. 8: 1-12.

Most of the lessons of the past quarter have been concerned with a definite and somewhat brief period of history, and one which is rather apt to be neglected in Bible reading and study, from the very fact that it treats more of history than of doctrine. It is well that the plan of the International Lessons brings these less familiar parts of the Bible before our notice, and that we should once in about seven years study them.

Perhaps the greatest value of these less spiritual parts of Scripture is the testimony which they bear to the progressive nature of God's revelation of Himself. Reading them should impress upon us the immense advantages we have, and the vastly greater light given to us. They should teach us to understand how "God having of old time spoken unto the fathers in the prophets by divers portions and in divers manners, hath at the end of these days spoken unto us in His Son." We should also feel the responsibilities laid upon us by the gift of greater knowledge, and by the opportunities placed before us.

The lessons, with two or three exceptions, have been concerned mainly with four persons—Esther, Ezra, Nehemiah and the prophet known as Malachi.

The lessons from Esther illustrate the truths that "If God be for us, who can be against us?" and that those who trust in the Lord will be taken care of. "Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust, also, in Him, and He shall bring it to pass."

In the history of Ezra we have an illustration of the great influence which a strong and able man can have on a community, and of the power for good which such an individual may become. "The hand of our God is upon all them for good that seek Him." Upon each one some gift is bestowed; and if it is exercised in the fear of the Lord and in His strength, His hand will be upon everyone for good. Nearly all great results are brought about through effort, and generally through some kind of suffering; but "They that sow in tears shall reap in joy."

Nehemiah, like Ezra, was a man ready and anxious to do God's work—His working motto was, "Pray and work." "Ask for the Lord's blessing, trust that He will give it, and then do the very best possible with the means at hand. Take all possible care, but be in earnest; work, fight, do your part—"Watch and pray."

One of the greatest evils, perhaps the greatest evil of our day, is intemperance. To escape this there is only one path of absolute safety—total abstinence.

It is needful for every follower of Christ to draw the line absolutely somewhere. The Christian is to be in the world, but not of the world.

To the Jew, in Nehemiah's time, the right keeping of the Sabbath was one of the marks which distinguished him from the Gentiles—it was needful for him to observe this mark of distinction. It may not be needful. It is not needful for the Christian to keep the Jewish Sabbath; but it is needful for him so to live that he may be known by his life and conversation to be the Lord's obedient child.

All that we have is the Lord's—"God loveth a cheerful giver"—one who gives from a sense of love, not simply of duty. It is not an acceptable gift when that is given which we do not value.

"Not what we give, but what we share:
For the gift without the giver is bare."

The great truth of cause and effect runs through the spiritual life as well as the physical. Sin brings about its legitimate results—"Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." This was as true when the prophet, Malachi, spoke, as when Paul wrote the words. The rule holds good for the righteous as well as for the wicked, "For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting."

The quarter and the year end with the promise of the Messiah, through whom everyone may receive life, and power, and guidance, which will enable him to live not unto himself, "but unto Him who loved us and gave Himself for us."

INDIANA STATE ENDEAVOR CONVENTION.

The State Convention, held in Friends' Yearly Meeting House, Richmond, Ind., Eleventh month 30th to Twelfth month 3d, is reported as passing all previous State records in size, interest and spiritual fervor. Elwood O. Ellis, pastor of the South Eighth Street Friends' Meeting, was the chairman of the local committee of arrangements, assisted by an energetic corps of workers, many of whom were Friends. Indeed, President F. E. Clark called it the "Friendly Convention." The decorations of the yearly meeting house are described as the most beautiful yet seen at any convention. The first evening the vast auditorium was crowded to its utmost half an hour before the time set for opening, and an overflow meeting had to be arranged in the large First Methodist Church near by, which was also soon crowded. Governor Mount gave the principal address of the evening in each place.

The following report of the Friends' rally is by Richard Haworth, president of Indiana Yearly Meeting Christian Endeavor Union, and vice-president of the State Union:

"The Friends' rally on Sixth-day afternoon was very large and enthusiastic. The program was especially fitting, and had been previously arranged and printed in the State program. The whole meeting was efficiently presided over by Albert J. Brown, of Indianapolis. The large auditorium of South Eighth Street Friends' Meeting House was literally packed with Friends eager to show their denominational loyalty, many of them being compelled to stand all through the rally. All this, and the deep spirit of thanksgiving welling up and bubbling over from hundreds of hearts, made it a day long to be remembered by all who witnessed that exhibition of God's love and mercy. Timothy Nicholson spoke on "A Citizen's Welcome," showing how Friends were peculiarly adapted to the occasion by their very life and foundation principles, citing some of the early history of Richmond Friends. Indiana Yearly Meeting has the largest membership of any in the world, and yet she is the mother of three other large yearly meetings, and the grandmother of three more, showing most beautifully that while she is charged with conservatism it is just enough to "hold fast that which is good," and promulgate a pure gospel to a lost and dying world. Prof. Irving King, of Bloomington, superintendent of Christian Endeavor work in Western Yearly Meeting, spoke on "Denominational Loyalty." He said that our loyalty must be maintained, not by set rules of speech and dress, and form of worship, but by adhering strictly to the doctrines and principles taught by Fox and Penn and others as founded on the teachings of Jesus and the apostles. He emphasized the indwelling and leading of the Holy Spirit as essential to our life and development. "Endeavorers at Work in the Church" was well explained in a paper by Lillian Griest, of Indianapolis. The Endeavor is not a separate organization from the church, but a part of it—the young people at work in the church. "Our Power for Evangelization" was ably handled by Prof.

Murray Wildman, of Spiceland. By a clear process he showed that the Friends have greater powers and opportunities for evangelization than almost any other people on earth; that we have been active along those lines, and that we must continue to be active if we would live and grow. "Our Thanksgiving" was a general praise service, led by E. O. Ellis, of Richmond. In less than half an hour more than two hundred persons expressed themselves as thankful to God for his manifold blessings to his people, and especially for what he has done for and through the Society of Friends. Following the program all present were invited to the Sabbath School rooms, where the Richmond Friends' Endeavorers had prepared an elegant reception and light lunch of cocoa and cake. The Friends' rally was the largest of all the rallies, and attracted most attention. The convention and our rally were an especial impetus for our denomination and its work in Indiana.

"Dr. Clark, Dr. Cornelius Woelfkin, Miss Kate Haus and other prominent speakers were present, and greatly aided in the general services of the convention. Dr. Woelfkin conducted the Quiet Hour service daily, to the great profit of all who attended.

"One of the interesting features of the convention was the report of the Endeavor Society in the Northern State prison, where over two hundred of the prisoners show, by changed lives, the blessing the Endeavor movement has been to them.

"P. P. Bilborn, so popular among Indiana Endeavorers, conducted the song services of the convention. Miss Ella Applegate, one of our own Endeavorers, was elected State secretary.

MISSIONARY READING COURSE.

We publish this week the fourth article on the lessons of the new missionary reading course. For further information concerning the lessons, address Gilbert Bowles, of Oskaloosa, Iowa. It is a splendid course, and you cannot do better than to undertake it. Let missionary committees take up the matter and begin the study of missions.

LESSONS ON INDIA.

STUDY I.—INDIA, PAST AND PRESENT.

Fourth Bible Lesson on Motives.

"A CRY FOR HELP."

Acts 16: 9; 1 John 5: 19.

Find two other references and apply to present conditions.

The country, India—"The Wonderland of the East"—from east to west would reach from Baltimore to Salt Lake City; north and south from Richmond, Va., to Panama. Its area, one and one-half million square miles, is twice that of the United States east of the Mississippi, with the exception of Ohio and Indiana.

The four great divisions of the Indian Empire are (1) Burmah, included in the above; (2) the Himlayan region, sparsely populated, containing the world's highest mountain, a bulwark against invaders, condensing and hurling back the moist monsoon; its southern slopes decked with mosses, ferns, red and pink flowers; sublime in its magnitude, it is the home of the Hindu gods; (3) the river plains, containing India's three great rivers, the Indus, Ganges and Brahmaputra, draining the region with greatest rainfall in the world, they create the rich tilled fields, mango groves, banyans and palms, covered with mud villages—the seat of India's civilization and history; (4) the Deccan or "south" region (the seat of the greatest famines), a triangle bounded on two sides by the water, and on the north by a line from Calcutta to Kambay Gulf; a tableland, with forests, peaks and valleys, containing the richest minerals, its black soil productive with proper rainfall, is the home of Christianity, the greatest influence in India.

Politically, India is a conglomeration of tribes and peoples under the rule of Great Britain.

The People and the Language.—India contains one-fifth of the world's population. The three hundred million (approximately) inhabitants belong to four principal races. The conquering Argo-Indic, two-thirds of the population. The average number of persons per square mile is 184—nine times that of the United States. The most densely populated regions are along the Ganges and in the Deccan.

Physically the people possess great endurance, but a workman is worth only one-sixth as much as an American. Caste is the greatest foe to Christianity. There are eleven languages, each spoken by more than five million people. The ones used by the largest number are the Hindi, Bengali and Telugu. The Sanskrit, the sacred tongue of Hinduism, is no longer spoken.

India in the Past.—The progressive aboriginal period is dimly traced in weapons of (1) rough flint; (2) polished flint, and (3) iron, with ornaments of copper and gold. The Veda Period begins with the conquest of the Aryans as early as 1,000 B.C. Tall, handsome, intellectual, commercial and religious, this people from Central Asia settled along the Indus River, receiving the name Hindus, and became the makers of India. The Buddhist Period (543 B.C. to 900 A.D.) saw the origin of Buddhism under Gautama Buddha and its missionary conquest of India. Arising to meet the corrupt Brahmanism, teaching helpful things concerning morality, education and industry, it was itself absorbed in Brahmanism or driven to foreign countries. Within this period came the invasion of Alexander the Great (327 B.C.) and the revival of Brahmanism. About the year 1,000 A.D. the Mohammedans began their invasion, continuing 700 years, leaving several thousand converts. The British Period began with the charter of the East India Company by Queen Elizabeth, the last day of the year 1600. Begun as a commercial enterprise, it became a military power, leading to Clive's founding the British Empire in India in 1757, and the proclamation of Victoria as Empress in 1877.

Civilization.—India, pre-eminently rural and agricultural, clings to clumsy implements and fights British irrigation. Manufacturing is all by hand. The village life is communal, each village being self-supporting, independent, self-governed, and supplied with its own artisans, farmers and laborers to make every article used.

Education.—Though many of the Brahmas of India are keen and speculative, the mass of them live on generation after generation with no educational advancement; unable to read, the prey of the priesthood and money-lenders. They are content if they can get enough rice to keep soul and body together. The British Government and the missionaries are doing much to promote education. One of the opportunities of the Christian church is the opening for teaching the English Bible to students in the colleges and universities. The study of English has prepared them, and gives them an eagerness to seek further instruction.

The Position of Woman.—The sacred books say, "A woman has no other god on earth but her husband." She must keep her eyes on her master. When he speaks she must not say a word. When beaten cruelly she must not weep." A Hindu once made the following confession for all sects: "We all believe in the sanctity of the cow and the depravity of woman." The Mohammedan husband can cast out his wife simply by the use of a peremptory formula, and she has no redress. Child marriage is one of India's greatest evils. The total number of married girls in all India under five years of age is 258,000. The total number of widowed girls is 14,000.

The Religions of India.—Hinduism spreads a veil of similarity over the greater part of India. Over one hundred and fifty millions are Hindus, socially bound by the fetters of caste. It is true that nineteen out of every twenty in the country are either Hindus or Mohammedans, and that from fourteen to fifteen out of every twenty are Hindus. Brahmanism chiefly registers and conforms the customs of the lower races. It is an earlier form of Hinduism. Other religious sects are the Mohammedans, Jains, Sikhs, Parsees and Christians.

Relation to Asiatic Continent.—Joseph Cook called India "the rudder of Asia." Geographically and commercially her position is commanding. It is the stronghold of the greatest heathen religion. India is the most accessible of the world's great mission fields. Being under the British flag brings protection and peace.

Library References.—The authorized text-book on India is "The Cross in the Land of the Trident." Price, in paper, 25 cents. Student Volunteer Movement, 3 West Twenty-ninth Street, New York city. Other references: Ross, "First Hundred Years of Modern Missions," "Cyclopedia of Missions," Graham's "Missionary Expansion."

EXAMINATION QUESTIONS ON CHINA.

Note.—Take as much time as desirable. Write the answers from memory, and then on a separate slip give corrections on any questions after having looked up doubtful points. It is better to use thin paper, about foolscap size. Both sides of the paper may be used. Make answers clear and definite. Let no one who has pursued the study fail to take the examination. Records of examination returns will be kept for reference. Final standing will be based upon these. In case any are not ready for examination now, send in papers as soon as possible. If any studying is done after reading questions, please mention the fact. Stamped envelopes will be sent to all who have enrolled. Any who wish to take the examination, whether enrolled or not, may do so, sending papers to Gilbert Bowles, Oskaloosa, Iowa.

1. Write a paragraph on the geography of China.
2. Characterize the Chinese people—physically, mentally and morally.
3. State briefly the religious condition of China, making special mention of Buddhism and Confucianism.
4. Sketch the Roman Catholic work in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, and its results.
5. Give name of two noted Protestant missionaries, with nationality, work and results.
6. What are some of the results of Christianity on public sentiment, morals, and conversion of natives?
7. Friends' Mission Stations: When established? Where located? Under what Boards?
8. What methods of work are most needed and most successful?
9. Name four American Friends and four English who are missionaries in China.
10. What things have impressed you most during this study in China?

WILLIAM FORSTER HOME, TENNESSEE.

It is due to the Friends who have hitherto contributed to the support of the William Forster Home, to give them some account of its present condition and the difficulties through which it has been recently passing. The death, in 1898, of Elizabeth H. Farnum, president of the association owning the home, whose liberal contributions had been the largest part of its pecuniary support in recent years, seriously impaired its resources, and compelled some change of arrangements to lessen expenses, while appealing to Friends generally for additional help. Some generous responses to this appeal were received, but not quite sufficient for the need. In the spring of 1899 Blanche H. Moore, the efficient and valued matron, was laid aside by serious illness, and the work was carried on till the end of the school year, in Fifth month, under a temporary, though capable, substitute, with the valuable aid of Jesse H. Moore, principal of the academy and husband of the matron. As matron for the school year commencing in Eighth month, 1899, Ehna Bailey, a Friend of Richmond, Ind., nearly 30 years of age, and well recommended, was engaged, and entered upon her duties with fair prospects of usefulness. Her health, however, was not strong, and a period of very hot weather occurring at that time, combined with her efforts to adapt herself to new surroundings, and a rather fatiguing excursion to Montvale Springs, proved too much for her strength. On the 1st of Tenth month she was attacked with typhoid fever, afterward complicated with pneumonia, and died on the 23d. The fever had prevailed for some time previously, over a belt of country extending from Columbus, Ohio, to Atlanta, Ga., and some cases had occurred in Friendsville and the vicinity, but nothing resembling an epidemic has been experienced. The sanitary condition of the home and its surroundings have been carefully attended to during the five years of J. H. Moore's residence, and disinfectants were faithfully used during and since E. Bailey's illness. The water supply has been analyzed by Reuben Haines, a scientific chemist of Germantown, Pa., and found to be pure and wholesome, and the association believes that no danger need be apprehended from the occupancy of the building. The family was small in the opening of the term, and most of the girls left during E. Bailey's illness. A Friend in the neighborhood was found to take charge till the end of the term, and for the term commencing First month 2d, 1900, Olive L. Jenkins, a Friend of Richmond, Ind., has been engaged, and is expected to take up the work at that time.

The circumstances thus detailed have caused the managers much anxiety, and they have earnestly sought Divine guidance as to their proper course. While the pecuniary condition of Friends generally in Tennessee has changed since the home was first established, twenty-nine years ago, the managers have not felt that the day of usefulness of the home has wholly passed, though some modification of methods may be found desirable in the future. For the present they see no course but to go forward, trusting that the blessing of our Heavenly Father, so manifest in the past, may still rest upon it. To Friends who have not been interested in this work, they would appeal, that they consider whether they can give any help. Donations or subscriptions, sent to the treasurer, Alice Lewis, 134 North Church Street, West Chester, Pa., would be thankfully received and promptly acknowledged.

A Friends' meeting has been started at Cambridge, Massachusetts, largely composed of professors and students in Harvard College. It meets on Fourth-day evening, at the home of one of the instructors. The first one held was well attended, and was a very helpful occasion.

The Temperance Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting has for some years published a Temperance paper once a month called the "Outlook." It has now decided to give up the publication of the "Outlook" and conduct a Temperance Department in THE AMERICAN FRIEND. It will thus reach a much wider circle of readers, and will accomplish correspondingly more good. This department will appear once a month, beginning this week.

Benjamin Johnson, of Richmond, Indiana, has been in Philadelphia for a week. He expects to go to the Holy Land in Second month for a short trip.

C. C. Kessinger and wife, of Leavenworth, Kansas, are preparing to go to the Orient for an extended visit. They have credentials from their yearly meeting, and propose to attend London Yearly Meeting on their return.

News from the Field.

Joseph Elkinton, of Philadelphia, after weeks of valuable service in relieving the sufferings of the Doukhobors, has returned to his home.

Friends interested in the early history of Pennsylvania will find pleasure in reading two volumes by Dr. A. S. Bolles. They cover the period embraced between 1609, when Hudson discovered Delaware Bay, and 1790, when a new Constitution for the State was adopted. The second volume is largely made up of special chapters on Immigration, Trade, Religion, etc. Friends are given sympathetic treatment throughout, and their large share in making the province and State is fully recognized. It is probably the best History of Pennsylvania since Bond's, and, of course, is much more extensive. The following history of the State is expected to take two or three volumes more.

The Evangelical Cuban Church, established in Havana, Cuba, under the auspices of the Evangelical Friends' Church, is situated on Tenerife Street, No. 52.

Public services were opened the first of First month of the present year. There are now eighty-six members on probation; a school for both sexes is sustained, and more than three hundred children attend its Sunday schools.

The pastor, Francisco G. Cala, was born in Havana the seventh of Seventh month, 1866. He was educated in the Apostolic Roman Catholic Church, in which church he obtained the order of deacon, filling the position of chaplain with Bishop Ramon Pierolso.

He abjured the errors of Romanism, leaving the Pope in order to follow Christ in the St. James Protestant Episcopal Church of New York city.

He came to Havana as a missionary of the Episcopal Church, under the direction of the Rev. J. F. Young, who was at that time Bishop of Florida. He soon left this denomination, not being in harmony with its practices, and for eighteen years has been preaching the Gospel independent of every sect and without receiving pecuniary help from any denomination.

Francisco G. Cala by chance became acquainted with the work entitled "Valiente por la Verdad" (A life of George Fox, published at Victoria, Mexico.—Ed.) and identified himself with the Friends' Church. He and his brethren requested recognition of the annual meeting of this denomination in Mexico, and their desire was gratified.

The Evangelical Church is progressing rapidly in Cuba. The meetings for worship are crowded and the spiritual condition of those that attend are satisfactory.

Gospel meetings have been held at Santiago de las Vegas, Guanabacoa, Guira de Melená and Alquizar, with an attendance of up to a thousand persons.

Twenty-seven marriages have been celebrated, complying with the requisites laid down in our Discipline.

As one of the co-laborers in this work I give these brief notices to the readers of this periodical, asking their prayers for the work, and that they may plead with the Almighty for the extension of His kingdom over all the earth.

DIGNA COLLAZO.

The above letter was written by a young lady, who is a member of our church in Havana, and was sent to "El Ramo de Olivo" for publication.

In a personal letter, dated Tenth month 18th, from Francisco G. Cala, pastor of Friends' Church in Havana, he makes the following statements: "The letter which the annual meeting of our church in that republic sent us in reply to our solicitation to be received into the Friends' Church is at hand. I reported the matter to the monthly meeting, which we now have established here, and great was the rejoicing of all to receive the information. Our church has now changed its name from the Evangelical Cuban Church to the Evangelical Friends' Church in Cuba, which name we are proud of because we believe that the doctrines and discipline of this church are the most in harmony with the spirit of Christianity."

IOWA YEARLY MEETING.

The meeting at Bangor is progressing successfully under the leadership of our pastor, A. J. Hanson, who faithfully devotes his time and strength to the work.

Lars Hanson, from Benton County, formerly from this place, gave us some very good sermons this fall, as he was paying us his farewell visit previous to crossing the water.

The Bangor Endeavorers are doing a good work. God is with us, yet there is room for improvement.

The Bible School, too, is doing its good work; is very largely attended, and all are working harmoniously.

Bangor Quarterly Meeting has decided to take up a line of temperance work the coming year, and conferences will be held at the different points. There will be one such meeting held here on the 15th of this month for the discussion of the various topics pertaining to church and temperance work. We need more consecrated work and workers along this line. MINA JACKSON.

Frederika, Iowa.—We began revival meetings at this place, Eleventh month 19th, closing Twelfth month 8th. Results of the meetings, sixty-two conversions and renewals. We have been assisted by the faithful and efficient services of the Quaker evangelist, M. B. Hunt, of Iowa Falls, Iowa. Thirty-two have been received on probation. There are more to follow.

The church has been quickened, backsliders reclaimed and difficulties between brethren satisfactorily adjusted; for all of which we are rejoicing and praising God.

E. P. STUBBS, Pastor M. E. Church.

Friends' Academy, at Pleasant Plain, Iowa, seems to be in a very prosperous condition. The enrollment is larger than for a number of years.

B. C. Winslow, principal, and Eva Coggeshall, assistant, are doing good work. A third teacher assists a part of the time. A number of the students have been converted during the series of meetings at Friends' Church, conducted by Richard Newby.

A series of meetings, held by Richard Newby, at Pleasant Plain, Iowa, from Eleventh month 19th to Twelfth month 5th, has resulted in great blessing to the church. Quite a number sought the baptism with the Holy Ghost; others were converted and renewed. Consecration and sanctification has a new meaning to many. We praise the Lord for the faithful service of our brother.

Marshalltown, Iowa.—E. P. Ellyson, whose Christian Training School is now located here, assisted by J. Edgar Williams, our pastor, closed, on the evening of the 13th instant, a short but interesting series of revival meetings. Absence of excitement, the manifestation of the power of God in the person of the Holy Spirit, were peculiarly characteristic of them. Eighteen professed to have been definitely blessed, either in pardon, restoration or sanctification. E. B. MENDENHALL.

NEW YORK YEARLY MEETING.

New York City.—Nearly one hundred members and attenders of the meeting on Twentieth Street gathered at a tea meeting on the evening of the 14th instant. After an hour and a half of pleasant social converse at the tables and in the parlors, the company was seated in the main meeting room and addressed by Frances J. Barnes, on "Friends in the Home"; by Susan K. Alsop, on "Friends in Education," and by John B. Garrett, on "Friends in Affairs." There was a general feeling that the occasion was both interesting and helpful.

OHIO YEARLY MEETING.

Sommerville, Ohio.—Charles D. W. Hiatt, the evangelist, from Fairmount, Indiana, has just closed one of the best and most successful meetings ever held at this place. His teaching was clear and with the power of the spirit. A second definite work was plainly and clearly taught. The work done seemed to be of a deeper work than ever before. Quite a good number were converted and the work here strengthened.

Hanover, Michigan.—A Pentecostal Convention was held at this place from Eleventh month 30th to Twelfth month 3d, under the auspices of the National Evangelistic Association, or Friends of Jesus. We had with us N. C. McLean and wife, C. E. McLean, S. H. Jones, Fred. Hauser and David G. Jones, whose Gospel messages were greatly blessed to the edifying and reviving of the Christian people. The attendance and interest was good, and a foundation for a great revival could the ministers have remained with us and carried on the meetings. The singing of Sister McLean was especially blessed to our people. J. A. W.

BALTIMORE YEARLY MEETING.

Curwensville, Pa.—We have had J. Robert Parker, of High Point, N. C., with us, who arrived here from Fishertown, Pa., on the first instant, and attended regular meeting on First-day, 3d instant, holding meetings at 2.30 and 7.30 p.m. each day, excepting two evenings on account of unpleasant weather. The meetings closed First-day evening, 10th instant.

The presence and power of the Lord was manifestly felt in each service. Our friend's chief concern was for the strengthening of the members. C. K. H.

Fishertown, Pa.—J. Robert Parker, of High Point, N. C., began meetings at this place Seventh-day, the 18th of Eleventh month, and held two meetings each day, except one, closing with our monthly meeting on the morning of the 30th.

He was wonderfully led of the Lord in speaking to the condition of the hearers, and we are permitted to see some of the fruit of his labors.

No one who heard him can plead ignorance of the way of salvation, for he taught with great clearness a full gospel—conversion for the sinner and sanctification for the believer.

Our prayer is, that he may be blessed and made a blessing wherever he goes. M.

OREGON YEARLY MEETING.

Salem Quarterly Meeting was held at Marion, Eleventh month 17th to 19th, and was a season of great blessing. The attendance was good, scattered as we are over an area of thirty-five miles. Levi D. Barr, the pastor of Newberg Meeting, was in attendance, and preached with the unction of the Holy Ghost, strengthening believers and building them up in the faith and hope of the fathers.

Our aged brother and father in the church, John Henry Douglas, was also present and gave us a very interesting account of his labors the past summer in Ohio and Indiana among the churches, many of which he was the instrument, under the Divine direction, of establishing a number of years ago. He also produced some returning minutes and letters of his acceptable attendance of several of the meetings.

After the Quarterly Meeting, Levi D. Barr came to Scott's Mills and commenced a series of meetings on Second-day evening, the 20th, and continued them for two weeks, in all twenty-nine sessions. The dear old story of Jesus and His love was proclaimed in the demonstration of the Spirit and with power. Jesus Christ the Saviour and Redeemer was faithfully held up, and was successful in drawing men and women to Him. Backsliders were reclaimed and sinners were converted to Him.

At least twenty-five gave testimony to the fact that Jesus Christ has power on earth to forgive sins and heal the backslider. Praise His holy name forever! J. S. R.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING.

Haviland, Kansas.—On the 12th of Eleventh month, Martilia and Mary Cox, of Coloma, Ind., began a series of meetings at this place, holding thirty-two sessions in all. The teaching was very clear and practical. The membership was greatly blessed. Over twenty were converted and renewed. There were four applications for membership. They went from here to Cottonwood Meeting, near Emporia, Kan., to engage in revival work.

Haviland Quarterly Meeting was held at Pleasant Plain, Pratt County, Kansas, on the 8th, 9th and 10th of Twelfth month. Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather the house was well filled. The Meeting was characterized by much spirituality.

On Seventh-day, after several earnest prayers, and a few short exhortations by our home minister, three came out to an altar of prayer and testified to the saving power of Jesus' blood.

The Christian Endeavor meeting on Sixth-day evening and the Missionary meeting on Seventh-day evening were well attended, and much interest was manifested in both departments of work.

On First-day, Isaac N. Taylor, of Willow Springs, Mo., preached from 2 Cor. 5: 17.

A lively testimony meeting followed his discourse, and all felt that our gathering had been owned and crowned by Him who rules above. M. M. WOODARD.

Masham, O. T.—Harmony Monthly Meeting was held on Seventh-day, the 9th inst. William F. Lewis returned a minute for service in the State of Kansas, with information that so far as the way opened the service was performed with much satisfaction.

The same Friend was granted a minute for service in Oklahoma by holding meetings and visiting families among all classes of people. He would greatly appreciate donations of Friends' literature, such as tracts, papers, books, Testaments, Bibles, etc. Friends and their doctrines are too little known in this new land.

All such contributions should be sent by mail, prepaid, to William F. Lewis, of Pond Creek, Oklahoma.

FRANCES M. HARMON.

Revival services were begun at Mt. Zion, in Russell County, Kansas, Eleventh month 11th, lasting until 26th, conducted by Martha Carr, of La Cross, Rush County. The Lord blessed the work. Ten conversions and renewals are reported, and the strengthening of the church. The interest commenced with the first session. Though a part of the time the weather was bad, yet the interest kept up till the last. Eternity alone will reveal the work done. THERESA G. STANLEY.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING.

Georgetown, Ill.—The many friends of Thomas Elwood Lewis will be sorry to learn that, on account of his wife's severe affliction with rheumatism, he has resigned his work at Poplar Grove, in Hamilton County, Indiana, and has returned to his old home in Georgetown. He has taken pastoral work at Elwood, two miles east of here, and will also engage in evangelistic work this winter when his wife's health will permit.

COFFEE EYES.

Diseased and Weak Eyes Helped by Leaving Off Coffee.

"Father would never let his two daughters drink coffee, so until I was married I never learned to like it. When baby came, some of my lady friends advised me to take up tea and coffee, which I did, on their advice. Shortly after, I became extremely nervous, and my eyes began troubling me. This grew until I could neither read or sew, and the inflammation and pain was great.

"Our good doctor was baffled, and advised a shaded room. For a month I lived in darkness. My appetite failed; yet to keep up, I still took the tea and coffee. Finally I went to visit in a family that used Postum Food Coffee, instead of common coffee. I began to improve daily, and at the end of four weeks returned home, taking with me a package of Postum, and told the cook to prepare it for breakfast, but not one of us could drink the flat, insipid stuff, as served that morning.

"Suddenly we remembered poor Bridget could not read. I had the Postum prepared then according to directions, and found we could make it as well as my friend had. When the package gave out, it was so far from our ranch to the store, that we began to use some old-fashioned coffee we had in the house. At once my eyes began to inflame and pain. I naturally concluded that coffee was the cause of it; just why or how, no one could say, but I immediately discontinued the coffee, and as soon as some new Postum could be secured began to use it again.

"This was four years ago, and since that time my eyes have given me no trouble but once; then I visited some friends, and, rather than appear fussy, drank coffee whenever they did, anticipating no bad results, for my eyes had been strong so long; but in a day the head began to ache above the eyes and the eyes became bloodshot, and before the end of the week were so bad I was obliged to go home. No temptation since has been enough to make me touch coffee, and whenever I find a listener, I sing the praises of Postum Food Coffee. My father, who had been a coffee-user so many years, died while yet in his prime. 'Stomach and heart trouble,' the doctor said. Poisoned by coffee, I absolutely know."—Mrs. Lena Austin, Placerville, Idaho.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING.

Vandalia Quarterly Meeting of Friends was held at Vandalia, Mich., Eleventh month 25th to 27th. Visiting ministers present were Fred. L. Ryon, of Adrian Quarterly Meeting; Rylie Garner and Willis Bond, of Oak Ridge Monthly Meeting, Indiana, and Anna J. Cook, from Western Yearly Meeting; also her husband, Jacob Cook, an Elder. All had Gospel service in the meetings.

On Sabbath afternoon Fred. L. Ryon gave an address on his work among the Indians, which was very interesting. He and his wife, with our home minister, are engaged in a revival in Vandalia Monthly Meeting. May the Lord bless their efforts and give them souls for their hire.

ELVIRA B. THOMAS.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING.

Alpheus Trueblood is now living at Carthage, Indiana, and serving as pastor of the meeting there.

Whitewater Quarterly Meeting was postponed from the usual time until the following Sixth-day, on account of its regular time conflicting with the State Christian Endeavor Convention.

Emma Spencer Townsend, of Wilmington Yearly Meeting, has a minute liberating her for service in North Carolina and Indiana Yearly Meetings, and recently visited Whitewater Quarterly Meeting.

Raynor Kelsay won the fifty-dollar prize in oratory at Earlham College, and is chosen representative for the State contest. Oscar Moon was close second in the contest.

Earlham has had another year of athletic honors, her closing football game being with Rose Polytechnic University, in which she won a clear victory. Only a few days before she defeated Depauw University. A gratifying record is, that her students are regarded as very honorable and courteous in their contests with other colleges.

The committees of Wilmington, Western and Indiana Yearly Meetings, in charge of the Bible Institute at Earlham College, met during the Christian Endeavor Convention and arranged a general outline for the program of the next Institute, to begin the last of next Seventh month. It is the united decision to have work of high order, such as will well repay those who come to attend. The former excellent standard established is still to be elevated, and the committees are earnestly seeking the Lord's guidance toward this end.

Dr. Edwin H. Mendenhall, of Richmond Meeting, was married to Grace Brown, on the Sixth instant, and they will reside at Abington, Indiana.

Susan Coleman, of Marion, a lifelong Friend, died on the 25th ult., in her eightieth year. She is the daughter of Robert and Anna (Hockett) Ellis, and widow of Elias Coleman, her first husband being Daniel Coffin.

Nathan W. Hiatt, of Swayzee, Ind., a member of Wabash Quarterly Meeting, was married to Martha Noble, of Centerville, on the 29th ult., and their home will be at Swayzee, where he is engaged in merchandise.

Martha O. Cammack, a minister, was married to Daniel Gibson, at Marion, Indiana, on the 30th ult. Their home will be at Jonesboro, Indiana.

The State Christian Endeavor Convention was held in the Indiana Yearly Meeting House, at Richmond, Eleventh month 30th to Twelfth month 3d. It was universally pronounced the best in the State, and Francis E. Clark, the president of the United Society, who was present, publicly stated that it is one of the best he has ever attended. He gave it the name of the "Friendly Convention," and paid a high tribute to Friends in whose home it was held. Cornelius Woelfkin, D.D., of Brooklyn, was the leading teacher present, and is regarded as about the clearest thinker and speaker ever heard, and is especially regarded as one in close touch with the God whom he serves. The result of his work was to arouse great hunger for knowledge of God, for deeper piety and better living. Kate Haus, of St. Louis, was accepted as another valuable worker, whom the people loved greatly to hear. Governor James A. Mount was also an acceptable speaker, and addressed first an overflow meeting at the Methodist Church near by and then the regular audience in the yearly meeting house. The attendance was very large. Friends had the largest de-nominal rally, and Eighth Street Meeting House was crowded to its utmost. Albert J. Brown presided, and exercises were given by Timothy Nicholson, Irving King, Lillian Griest, Mary Morris; a song by a quartette from Richmond, Murray Wildman, and a praise service, led by Ellwood O. Ellis, in which testimonies of praise were given so spontaneously and rapidly that nearly two hundred spoke in about twenty minutes.

Marion Quarterly Meeting was held Twelfth month 8th, 9th and 10th.

On Sixth-day, Joseph O. Binford, our yearly meeting evangelistic superintendent; William P. Angel, pastor of Muncie Meeting, and Rylie Garner, minister from a neighboring quarter, were present.

J. O. Binford read Jno. 21: 15, 16 and 17, and commented on the principle of love that causes us to look after the welfare of others.

William P. Angel followed, endorsing what had been said, and spoke of the spiritual force of God to his church. "The true minister and true elder are desirous of squaring their lives by the word of God, with the assistance of the Holy Spirit." "Some take inclination in place of revelation."

After the usual routine of business was gone through with we discussed "The difference between Hicksite and Orthodox doctrine." Discussion opened by Sarah Ann Marshall, with a paper well written upon the subject.

On Seventh-day we had the company of J. O. Binford, W. P. Angel, Franklin and Mary Moon Meredith and Enos Harvey. Meeting was opened with service of song and prayer, after which J. O. Binford spoke on "We are Called in Righteousness." The material out of which God proposes to build His church is in the rough—needs trimming and shaping; structure builded without Christ the chief corner-stone will be as the house upon the sand.

Brother Angel spoke from Psalm 69: 30-31. He says his mission to our quarter is to tell some of us to unseal our lips, have plenty of good cheer and enthusiasm.

Sabbath morning Brother Binford read a portion of Acts 26, and took for his theme the conversion of Paul, who conferred not with flesh and blood, and was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision.

J. R. S.

Knightstown, Ind.—Spiceland Quarterly Meeting convened the 9th and 10th. A joyful, glad service of thanksgiving and praise to God for His abundant goodness and mercy was had.

Arthur Chilson, of Cleveland, gave proof of his ministry in acceptable service.

Alice Brown and Bertha Varney, of Cleveland Training School, were with us with song and testimony for Jesus.

Our aged friend, Thomas Miller, was also in attendance with words of cheer for the Master. Our reading clerk, Daniel Larence, opened business session with a feeling prayer for Divine guidance and blessings on the meeting.

A. M. Kenworthy has enlisted Arthur Chilson, Alice Brown and Bertha Varney in a protracted meeting at Spiceland.

Nearly $100 was raised in Knightstown Meeting to meet delinquency of past years.

Died

LYTLE.—Died, on Tenth month 7th, 1899, at the residence of her brother, John J. Lytle, Moorestown, N. J., Hannah Lytle, in the 85th year of her age. She was a lifelong, beloved member of Baltimore Monthly Meeting.

SHINN.—Mary, wife of Joseph Shinn, died at Springdale, Iowa, Eleventh month 9th, 1899, aged 63 years. She was a daughter of George and Susannah Stratton. She was a birthright member of Friends' Society, was converted in 1863, and some years later received the baptism with the Holy Spirit.

FULLER.—Died of pneumonia, in Kansas City, on Tenth month 23d, 1899, G. Walter Fuller, aged 26 years. He was ready for the summons. He was a member of Buffalo Monthly Meeting of Friends.

COX.—Homer, son of Henry and Ruth Cox, of Varck, Kansas, died suddenly, Eleventh month 8th, 1899, in his 7th year.

News and Events.

Last week was a depressing season for England, and has been appropriately called "Black Week." The reverse-suffered by General Buller's column advancing for the relief of Ladysmith was the climax of a series of defeats received within as short a period as seven days. The eastern, central and western British divisions moving northward by concentrated purpose, and in pursuance of the general plan of campaign to drive the Boers out of British territory, to relieve British beleaguered towns, and to transfer the field of war to Boer territory, were all repulsed in quick succession. The British have lost thousands of soldiers and many guns, and the British Generals, Buller, Methuen and Gatacre, with the flower of the British army, for the time being have been placed on the defensive in regions where the inhabitants, in racial sympathy with the Boers, are held to the British allegiance with slender ties. England has underestimated the strength of her enemy, and is paying the penalty.

The severest defeat of the British in the Boer war was that of General Buller, at Tugela River, on the way to Ladysmith. The Boers completely overpowered the British, and to prevent useless sacrifice of lives General Buller ordered a retreat. He left behind eleven guns, and lost in killed and wounded about 1,000 men.

This significant notice was given out by the War Department on the 17th: "As the campaign in Natal, in the opinion of her majesty's Government, is likely to require the presence and undivided attention of General Sir Redvers Buller, it has been decided to send Baron Roberts, of Kandahar and Waterford, as Commander-in-Chief of South Africa, with Lord Kitchener as Chief of Staff."

The British losses in the South African war, up to the present writing, are estimated at 7,630.

Secretary Gage has recommended to Congress that authority be given him to designate one or more banks or bankers in the Philippines, Cuba and Porto Rico, as depositories of public moneys.

All the big coal mines in Webster County, Iowa, were reported, last week, as tied up by the strike of about five hundred men at Kalo, Coalville, Lehigh and Carbon. The men have asked for an increase in wages.

Complications have arisen in the condition of Dwight L. Moody, the evangelist, which are cause for much anxiety.

THE FEAR OF DEATH.

"I have seen thousands of persons die under all sorts of circumstances, and never yet have I seen one display the slightest fear of death." This remarkable statement was made the other day, according to the Philadelphia "Record," by a physician who has practiced many years in Philadelphia, and who has seen a great deal of hospital service.

"It is a popular fallacy," he went on, "to imagine that a death-bed scene is ever terrible, other than a parting between loved ones. The fear of the unknown is never present at the last. Even amid ignorance and vice I have never experienced such scenes as a novelist, who strives after realism, will sometimes picture.

"When a patient is told that he cannot recover and the end is near, he invariably seems resigned to his fate, and his only thought seems to be of those who are to be left behind. This is true alike of men and women.

"Those who become hysterical and declare they are not fit to die are the ones who are not as ill as they think they are. These always get well. A psychological reason? Oh, I don't know that there is any. It's just a human trait."

A PRAYING ENGINEER.

Some weeks ago it was my privilege to ride from New York to Albany on the engine of the Empire State express. The engineer was a little, bronzed, weather-beaten man of nearly fifty. He ran around his engine with oil in hand, then climbed to his place and waited for the conductor's signal to start. When it came he made a quick motion, seized the lever, and we were off.

For exactly three hours the telegraph poles sped past and we rolled and thundered onward through towns, villages, cities, over switches, crossings, bridges, culverts, and through tunnels and viaducts at the terrific rate of a mile a minute. The little man at the throttle looked straight out ahead at the two lines of glistening steel; one hand on the throttle, the other ready to grasp the air-brake. I was not afraid, for I saw he was not. He spoke not a word, nor looked at me, nor at the fireman, who worked like a Titan. But I saw that his lips kept moving as he forced the flying monster forward.

At last we reached Albany. What a relief it was! My nerves were unstrung. I had had enough for a lifetime. The little engineer had left the cab, and was tenderly feeling the bearings. I turned to the fireman. "Bill, why does he keep moving his lips here at the lever?"

"Who—th' old man? Why, don't you know? He allus prays on a fast run. Twenty years he's run on this road with never an accident—the pluckiest man that ever kicked a gauge-cock, he is."—"The Arena."

THE correct construction of a costume according to one's own ideas can best be accomplished at home by one's self. The most convenient stitching mechanism for the purpose is the Singer Automatic, making the single-thread chain-stitch. Its simplicity of parts, easy operation, and the excellence of its work, specially commend its use to the dilettante dressmaker desiring to express her artistic perceptions in the most appropriate form.

Having all the advantages claimed for other "automatic" sewing-machines, the Silent Singer has many points of preference that can easily be demonstrated by comparison. Of faultless construction and finish, it is absolutely the lightest-running, the simplest and most compact. It is more easily threaded, and its parts are better protected from dust. The Christian League of Philadelphia

On March 19, 1895, The Christian League was organized, with the following objects in view:

1. To organize and carry forward with vigor and enlarged power, in the City of Philadelphia, the great work committed in common to all Christians, co-operating therein with other Societies wherever practicable.
2. To confer and act in concert with the Civil Authorities in all matters which may promote the moral and physical welfare of the people, especially in the suppression of vice and immorality, in public and in private.
3. To provide increased facilities, and to secure Christian Workers for carrying on the work of the League in those parts of the City where the need is the greatest and laborers are few.
4. To provide proper homes, especially in the country, for children surrounded in the City by the most depraving influences.
5. To devise ways and means to assist in the preservation and observance of the Sabbath, or the Lord's Day; to discourage the liquor traffic, to prevent the publication and sale of impure literature, and the exhibition of demoralizing pictures; and generally to promote such measures as will make and keep Philadelphia a Christian city in name and in fact.

The Christian League has accomplished a wonderful work in the City of Philadelphia, during the past four years, in the enforcement of law, the improvement of neighborhoods and conditions, the removal of temptations from the pathway of the young, and spread of Gospel influence in dark places.

To an unusual degree we have the co-operation of the Civil Authorities, who frequently solicit our aid in matters involving the reformation of the unfortunate.

The Christian League's Mission School, at 929 Race Street, has exerted a saving and restraining influence in "Chinatown."

The Chinese Y. M. C. A. now numbers about 180 members. The Gospel is preached in their native tongue, while the school teaches them our own language.

To continue and enlarge the general and Chinese work, we are trying to raise ten thousand dollars this year. Will you kindly help us? Your contribution, sent to our Treasurer, Mr. John H. Converse, 500 North Broad Street, will be appreciated. A prominent clergyman recently stated in public that a friend, who contributes to the Christian League, said it was his "best investment." To further quote his words, "it does solid, splendid work."

If there is anything wrong in your neighborhood, requiring the attention of the Authorities—either police or health—send word to the office of The Christian League.

Bequests of Money, Securities or Real Estate should be to "The Christian League of Philadelphia." In this way the Organization is distinctly designated.

FOR ITS OWN SAKE.

There is one fact which in our utilitarian days we must be careful to emphasize. We must make this life with God an end itself, an object worthy of our most strenuous endeavors. We pray nowadays not with the door shut, but open. Shut it may be to the casual intruder or to the ears of our nearest, but wide open to the tumultuous world. In these days of hurry and "hustling," of doing everything with one eye upon what will pay, we are apt to carry our spirit of bargaining and economy of time into our life with God. We ask for this bit of help and for that; we pray for this case of need and for that; we embrace Armenia and our national life, foreign missions and the conversion of the Jews, our churches and the cities of the land, the poor and distressed, in the sweep of our sympathies. Then we remember that we need pardon and strength, and we pray very briefly about it. All this is unspeakably necessary. No Christian life is complete without it; indeed, no man is in sight of the real spirit and significance of Jesus who can banish these great subjects from his private and personal communion with God. I hope to show what place these matters have in the inner life of meditation and prayer. But what I am concerned to know is whether there ought not to be found behind our interest in all these external matters an interest in God Himself.—Douglas Mackenzie.

"The Youth's Companion" announces an article of permanent value,—light and anecdotal in manner and matter, however,—describing the Spanish capital before the outbreak of the war, from the point of view of the Hon. Hannis Taylor, who, as the United States Minister, had exceptional opportunities to observe. Incidentally it gives as flashlight portraits such leaders as Emilio Castelar and the ill-fated prime minister, Señor Canovas del Castillo, who died by the hand of an assassin.

RICHES IN THE TRANSVAAL.

The yield of these Kimberley diamond mines is said to average about fifty-five hundred carats a day. They furnish ninety-five per cent. of the world's diamonds. Mr. Kunz, of Tiffany's, estimates that so far nine and a half tons, worth three hundred million dollars in the rough and double that when polished, have been taken out of the Kimberley "yellow" and "blue." On a nominal capital of less than twenty millions, the DeBeers Company pays annual dividends of fifty per cent.

But the record of Kimberley should not obscure the fact that elsewhere in South Africa there are "infinite riches in a little room." For instance, the largest diamond known to exist was found at Jagersfontein, eighty miles away—a gem two and a half inches long, one and a quarter inches thick and two inches wide, weighing nine hundred and seventy-one carats, or nearly half a pound avoirdupois. And in many parts of South Africa gold is plentiful, notably in the Witwatersrand region of the Transvaal. When the present war began, the Transvaal was yielding annually about sixty million dollars' worth of gold—or more than one-fifth of the world's production, of which, by the way, the United States is credited with nearly sixty millions.

Conservative authorities have estimated that, carried down to a depth of four thousand feet, the Rand mines will yield in all more than three and a half billion dollars' worth of gold, of which almost a third will represent clear profit.

The old phrase of "a king's ransom" seems thin and meaningless when one realizes the enormous wealth destined to be controlled by the victor in the present struggle.—"The Youth's Companion."

A PRAYER.

O thou full of compassion, I commit and commend myself unto Thee, in whom I am, and live, and know. Be Thou the Goal of my pilgrimage, and my Rest by the way. Let my soul take refuge from the crowding turmoil of worldly thoughts beneath the shadow of Thy wings; let my heart, this sea of restless waves, find peace in Thee, O God. Thou bounteous Giver of all good gifts, give to him who is weary refreshing food; gather our distracted thoughts and powers into harmony again; and set the prisoner free. See, he stands at Thy door and knocks; be it opened to him, that he may enter with a free step, and be quickened by Thee. For Thou art the Wellspring of life, the Light of eternal brightness, wherein the just live who love Thee. Be it unto me according to Thy word. Amen.—St. Augustine.

THE CHRISTIAN LEAGUE OF PHILADELPHIA.

The Christian League has wrought a good work in this city in the enforcement of laws and the improvement of moral and sanitary conditions during the past four years.

It seeks to co-operate with the civil authorities, and acts upon the complaints of citizens, thus abating many evils and nuisances.

Its Mission in "Chinatown" has practically redeemed that section. Better order now prevails, and the preaching of the gospel has led many young Chinamen to unite with evangelical churches.

The purposes of the League are carried forward with energy and success, but there is at present urgent need of funds, and an earnest appeal is made for contributions for the general and Chinese work. There is need of a Y. M. C. A. and school building for foreign missionary efforts at home. There could be no better memorial to perpetuate the name of a faithful servant of the Master, who longed for the salvation of the heathen in our midst, who become the best missionaries to their own people.

The work of the League is strongly endorsed by Joseph S. Elkinton, Thomas Scattergood, and many others.

Practical Christianity

By RUFUS M. JONES, Litt. D.

This is a collection of short, practical articles on important religious subjects. It deals with questions which every thinking man must meet in a practical way, and it contains a positive message for the times. In these fifty-three essays many of the most important phases of the spiritual life receive consideration, and the notes of hope and victory, and faith in the overcoming life, are everywhere manifest. It is a book which should appeal to all classes of Christians. The book also contains a suggestive chapter on "The Message of Quakerism."

Special Fountain Pen

PREMIUM OFFER!

The POST FOUNTAIN PEN is the Only SELF-FILLING, SELF-CLEANING Pen manufactured in the world.

It is the Greatest Invention in Fountain Pen construction of the Age.
No Filler Required—A Fine Gold Pen that will last a Lifetime—No Inky Fingers.

The manufacturers of the "Post" Pen have a wonderful list of testimonials. Prominent men in Politics, Finance, Law, Religious Movements, Literary Men and Business Men—men who have never before allowed their names to be published in connection with a testimonial—have given unqualified and public praise to the POST FOUNTAIN PEN.

THE "Post" is declared to be the fountain pen nearest to perfection of anything yet found. It has been unstintedly praised by Josiah Strong, Lew Wallace, Ira D. Sankey, Commander Booth Tucker, Bishop Vincent, Colonel Herrick, the late ex-Governor Flower, Consul Booth Tucker, and very many others.

GENERAL LEW WALLACE says:

"The fountain pen 'Post' was received, and I have taken the liberty of trying it thoroughly. I have tried every pen of the kind on the market, and now unhesitatingly give the preference to the 'Post.' It not only feeds itself with less care, but has the immeasurable advantage of re-supply without inking the fingers. I do all my work with it."

Lew. Wallace.

Six Cardinal Points

Peculiar to the Post Pen:

*Self-Cleaning
Self-Filling Simplicity*

*Durability Reliability
No Leaking*

This cut illustrates the simplicity of cleaning or filling the "Post."

COLONEL HERRICK, in Cleveland, O., is best known as the president of the foremost savings bank in that city; throughout the States, however, he is equally well known as one of America's most successful business men. We are pleased to note his comparison of the Post pen to other makes. He writes:

"Until recently the great conveniences offered in a good fountain pen were unknown to me, having been deterred from the purchase and use of a pen by the rather disastrous experience of others with leaking and dry pens. Recently, however, I became possessed of a Post pen, which I am pleased to commend as in every way a perfect pen, simple in its mechanism, durable, perfectly tight, and responding readily. It has fully answered my expectations, and is a source of much comfort to me."

THE CITY OF GOD.

"For behold, the kingdom of God is within you."

O thou not made with hands,
Not throned above the skies,
Nor walled with shining walls,
Nor framed with stones of price,
More bright than gold or gem,
God's own Jerusalem!

Where'er the gentle heart
Finds courage from above,
Where'er the heart forsook
Warms with the breath of love,
Where faith bids fear depart,
City of God! thou art.

FRIENDS IN AMERICA—1899.*

For the first time in recent years our annual statistics indicate a loss instead of a gain in membership. Last year our report showed a total gain of 1,301; this year the total loss amounts to 446. Next week we expect to give the subject a careful examination in detail, and to show how this decrease has come about; for the present we wish rather to consider the situation more in general. Ohio makes the largest gain for the year—264, and Iowa the largest loss—409. For the first time in recent years Indiana Yearly Meeting shows a decrease, though it is slight—55—and Western has only a small margin on the other side—79.

Every one of the Atlantic Coast yearly meetings indicates a loss, though in most of them the loss is trivial—New England 2, and North Carolina 4; the total loss amounting to 250. Each of the Pacific Coast yearly meetings has slightly gained—Oregon 17, and California 24.

We do not consider the loss of the year in any sense a ground for discouragement or alarm, nor does it mean that there has been a slackening of positive work or evangelistic effort during the year. In fact, we believe that most of our meetings are in a more healthy and solid condition than one year ago, and that there is more spiritual life and power than when we took the retrospect last year. There is something more to be sought than numbers on the plus side—though we do not undervalue numbers—and that is a solid, united, organic and spiritual membership, possessed of a comprehension of Christ's purpose in His church. One spiritualized man shall count more than a thousand nominal members who have only a name that they live.

The real question which concerns us is whether we are gaining in this direction. If we really are the numbers will come in time, for the future belongs to that branch of the church which has the greatest spiritual life and wisely directed power.

The year just closing has been uneventful, but at the same time marked by auspicious tendencies. The interest in education is steadily increasing, and a num-

Friends, have received encouraging additions to their funds during the year. A legacy of $100,000 has come to New York Yearly Meeting for advancing the cause of education, while a strenuous movement is under way to give the colleges of the West such a solid financial equipment that they will be able to fulfil their manifest mission.

Undoubtedly the most epoch-making event of the year has been the preparation of a new discipline for the American yearly meetings—designed to bring all these bodies into a closer union, and to organize and consolidate, as far as possible, the great lines of religious and philanthropic work.

Friends now have 284 principal and subordinate mission stations in foreign countries, with a native membership of 3,585, not counting the 612 Indians who are members, or the 550 Mexican Friends. There are 158 Friends now engaged in foreign mission work, and 8,305 persons are enrolled in the 308 Bible Schools maintained by Friends at the various mission stations.

Besides this present work a strong movement is under way to open a new mission in Cuba, and already a meeting of Cuban Friends has been organized in Havana, and affiliated with the Mexican Friends.

This year has seen quite a decided revival of interest in historic Quakerism, and a variety of valuable books have appeared. Among the most noteworthy are Fiske's "Dutch and Quaker Colonies in America," Sharpless's "History of Quaker Government" (in two volumes), President Hazard's "Quaker Meetings in Narraganset," the first two volumes of Bolles's "History of Pennsylvania," Jenkins' "Family of William Penn," and Fisher's "True William Penn."

THE GREAT EVANGELIST.

At noon, on the 22d of this month, Dwight L. Moody ended his life of earthly service and entered upon that life which crowns and consummates the temporal. His death brings a solemn hush over us all, and we realize that we have lost one of the best men and one of the greatest workers of our time,—a man whose place cannot be filled by any single man now left in the world.

Forty-six years ago, while working in a shoe-store in Boston, he was converted through the faithfulness of a Bible school teacher. He made application for membership in the Congregational Church, but the committee to whom his application was referred were at first doubtful about receiving him, owing to his defective knowledge of Christian doctrine! After six months of waiting, during which time he made himself acquainted with the doctrine of the church, he was received into membership.

Three years later he began active religious work in Chicago, where his bible-school work and his personal efforts to reach and influence men showed plainly that this young man was a remarkable kind of Christian. When he began preaching in Chicago, in 1863, he declared his faith, in prophetic words, that "by the Lord's blessing, a religious influence would go out from this church through every county in the state; through every state in the Union, and finally, crossing the waters, help to bring the whole world to God." Before he was at all well known in this country, outside of Chicago, he went to England, in company with Ira D. Sankey, and began one of the most wonderful evangelistic campaigns ever known in the world. In almost every great city in the United Kingdom multitudes flocked to hear the simple Gospel story told and sung, while in London 14,000 persons came daily to the great hall to have their hearts touched with the plain message of God's love to men.

No success of this remarkable man's life was more signal than his victory over the students at Oxford and Cambridge, where his patience and tact and spiritual power and genuine good will won his almost riotous audiences.

On his return to America he began a no less remarkable Gospel work in the great cities of his own country. It is to be doubted if any man has ever directly reached and affected so many lives during his own life-time as Moody did. No building could be found in any city which would hold the thousands who crowded to hear this man talk about Jesus Christ and the characters of the Bible. His life and his work have overwhelmingly proved that all classes of men believe in religion when it is presented in such a way that it appeals to their hearts and lives, and he was always as successful speaking to the educated as to the uneducated. He touched the chord which makes all men kin.

He has, furthermore, built up three great schools at Northfield, and one at Chicago. He has also organized and conducted, at Northfield, conferences for Christian workers and for college students, which have had a powerful influence for good. In short, it would be no more possible to compute and measure the influences which have gone out from this man's life than it would be to trace out in detail the benefits which come from the moisture which evaporates from the ocean, and which comes flowing back in streams. He was not a constructive thinker; he was not a theologian; he was not a system maker; he was a great-souled man who saw, with the insight of a genius, the ber of the institutions of learning, managed by supreme need of salvation from sin and the power of God unto salvation through Christ. He went straight to the mark with his message, and he spoke with an assurance and conviction which could not be resisted. He was broad in his sympathies, clear in judgment, wise in his knowledge of men, sound to the core in faith, both in God and in men, and very keen in his estimate of character. His friendship and love for Henry Drummond were touching and beautiful; and his confidence and faith, during these latter years, that the Gospel of love and salvation is as effective as ever, are evidence of his large vision. He was one of God's men, and he has fought a good fight and finished a noble course, and "the Master of all good workmen" has called him to his crowning. He left the world with words of beautiful faith on his lips, "Earth is receding; heaven is opening before me."

A NEW GOSPEL AND SOME NEW REVELATIONS.

RENDEL HARRIS has recently found among a pile of Syriac leaves, which were brought from the East, a document containing one Gospel and three Apocalypses woven together. It is called "The Gospel of the Twelve Holy Apostles, together with the 'Revelations' of each of them: Done from Hebrew into Greek and from Greek into Syriac."

In the Contemporary Review for December Rendel Harris gives a very interesting study of this collection. He finds the actual manuscript is of the eighth century, which is, therefore, "of an honorable age." He thinks that the Gospel was written merely as an introduction to the "Revelations." He confines his article largely to a study of "the Revelation of John the Little, the brother of James, and they twain are the sons of Zabdai." Rendel Harris shows that the Apocalypse is a product of the period between 750 and 800, and he concludes that as late as this date "the Christian Church in Syria was capable of manufacturing new Gospels and as many new Apocalypses as might be desired." "Indeed the manufacture of Apocalypses," he says, "continues right down through the middle ages. Apocalypses were the religious novels of early Christianity."

EDITORIAL NOTE.

WE wish to announce that we have a large supply of the Discipline Number of THE AMERICAN FRIEND on hand. Copies will be sent to any address for five cents. We hope our readers will encourage their friends and neighbors to get a copy and study it. We will send a roll of ten copies to any address for thirty cents in stamps.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

CUBA'S NEED OF GOSPEL.

BY BENJAMIN F. TRUEBLOOD, LL.D.

No one of us can have watched the progress of events in Cuba for the last two years without having reached the conclusion that the great need of the island is the Gospel of Jesus Christ in its simplicity and purity. But to visit the country and come in contact daily with its people is to have this impression deepened tenfold. I had not been in Havana three days before I saw that I had not grasped in any adequate way the seriousness of the situation.

After much careful observation and investigation I have become convinced that the vital difficulty which has been at the root of all the disasters which have befallen the island has been the absence of the Gospel with its inspirations to right living, to thought, to activity, to high aims, to benevolence, brotherly love and peace. This has been the fatal defect with both governors and governed. The people scarcely know what the Gospel means. They have been kept in ignorance of it, and given something else, under its name. The religious direction of the island has been a worse failure than the political. It is generally believed that three-fourths of the population cannot read and write. This is disputed by Cubans, and may be an exaggeration. Of those who can read it is doubtful if anything like half ever saw the inside of a whole New Testament. The masses of the people are virtually without religion, except that of natural instinct.

Until since the war there was no Protestant work in the island, except that undertaken by the Baptists in Havana and one or two other places. You cannot find anywhere a Protestant house of worship built for that purpose, not one. Nearly all the work undertaken since the war—that is, within the last eight or nine months—is carried on in ordinary Cuban dwellings, rented for the purpose. In one case, an old theater has been purchased. But as yet there is little Protestant work. Everything else has moved faster than the Church, which ought to be the liveliest institution on earth. The Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and Episcopal Churches have all begun work in Havana, but everything is yet in its infancy, except the Baptist work, under Mr. Diaz, which was inaugurated some years ago.

In the other cities still less has been done, and in the villages and country districts nothing, except now and then a bit of stray preaching. In Cienfuegos, which is, next to Havana, the most important commercial city in the island, with more than fifty thousand inhabitants, there are but two Protestant organizations, reaching not over a thousand people in any way. The Southern Methodists have two workers, with their families, here. I found their work to be most excellent, but it is not yet safely on its feet. The two young men, with their wives, live in the building where the work is done. The Southern Baptist work in Cienfuegos dates from before the war, and is much stronger, probably because they have not attempted to draw the color line, and because the pastor is a native Cuban. They have a considerable congregation of church members, both adults and young people, and a Sabbath school of more than two hundred children. They also have a day school of about the same size, in the same building, an old dwelling house, in which their workers all live. This is a sample of the very best Protestant work in the island. It is good work, full of promise, but it is new, and has yet had but little general influence. It is woefully inadequate to the needs of the city.

The people are not even in the Catholic churches, in which they have largely lost confidence. The Catholic congregations consist of a few women and almost no men. The masses are without religious instruction. The state church is gone, and the masses are like sheep having no shepherd. When not at work, they pass their time lounging, sleeping, "gassing," smoking, gambling at cards, and in various pleasures, often of the lowest animal kind. They live close to the earth in more senses than one. They strike me, however, both colored and white, as having more native vigor and capacity than I had expected. They furnish substantial ground for believing that religiously, as well as industrially, the island has a great future, if the right influences are brought to bear, and that immediately.

The Protestant Churches of the United States have never had such an opportunity thrown right at their feet. I am afraid they have little sense of its urgency. The great question is not that of feeding and caring for the fifty thousand (more or less) reconcentrado orphans, who are fast being absorbed into the general mass of the people, or that of putting the people politically and industrially on their feet. These are deeply important, but they do not go to the root of the need, which is a new spiritual and moral life. Ten times the work which any of the denominations has organized ought to have been inaugurated by each of them many months ago. The people are now open to the Gospel, and I am sure would receive it in multitudes, if it were at once presented to them in its simplicity, free from ritualism, from corruption and spiritual tyranny, as a gospel of truth, light and spiritual freedom. If this is not done now, in a few years, with increased education, their former experiences with religion will induce a great influx of rationalism.

The opening in Cuba for us Friends is a most extraordinary one, and we ought to rise to the occasion in a brave and self-sacrificing way. The spontaneous Friends' work organized by Francisco G. Cala in Havana is, so far as I was able to judge, after a week of observation, a most promising one. It ought to have not only our sympathy, but our immediate support, while it should be left to develop largely, if not wholly on native lines. He understands our principles quite as well as the most of us do, having been associated for a time with the Friends' work at Victoria, Mexico, and having been directly led by the Spirit of God away from priestcraft and formalism. He is putting these principles into operation in a fresh and vigorous way, with which I was much pleased.

He has gathered a congregation of nearly fifty members, older and younger, and has organized a Sabbath school and a day school, with about sixty children in each. I visited all their meetings, and both the Sabbath school and the day school. The services are very simple, but fresh and hearty. They consist of singing, Bible reading, prayer and preaching. The children, and all others who can, join heartily in the singing. The two sermons which Mr. Cala preached on Sabbath would have been a credit to any of our American preachers. He is well versed in the New Testament, has read carefully the literature issued from the Friends' press in Mexico, and understands well how to deal with the errors of Romanism, having been at one time connected with the Catholic Church. Many of the members are young people. They are nearly all uneducated, but interested and earnest. All who apply for membership are kept on probation for a time.

It is difficult to understand the faith of a man who could undertake such a work as this without any visible sign of outside help. So far the work has been supported entirely by voluntary contributions from the members and the parents of the children in the day school. But they are all in limited circumstances, and how they can do anything for the work was more than I could see. But they take up collections regularly on Sabbath and at week-night meetings. The last night I was in Havana was their business meeting evening. They received one new member, adopted a proposition to paint and fix up their quarters, and appointed a committee to secure funds. They did the business in a fresh, intelligent and expeditious way, several members taking part and all being encouraged to do so. F. G. Cala, though scarcely able to clothe himself in a proper way, is a man of energy, and strikes me as having much of the true apostolic spirit. He was going, the day after I left, to Santiago de las Vegas, near Havana, to open a new work there. He has preached in a number of places outside of Havana, having sometimes congregations of a thousand people.

One of the first things which our newly forming American Friends' Board of Foreign Missions ought to do, when ready for work, is to assist this work enough to encourage it, though not enough to rob it of its vitality. The quarters which they now have costs them about forty dollars per month, and is by no means what they ought to have. They could have three hundred children in the day school immediately if they could care for them. Mr. Cala, wife and one child, live in the building, and all their meetings and the school are held there. On Sabbath evening almost as many people crowded around the outside of the door and window as there were inside, and listened eagerly to the Gospel. The organization needs money for Bibles and hymn books. They have had but three whole Bibles and three hymn books in their work, the children being taught Scripture verses from text cards and from hearing, and learning the hymns by heart. The children in the day school can now all read a little, some in the second reader, though scarcely one of them could read a word when they entered. The few Testaments which I took with me were given by Mr. Cala to members of the school and Church, and were accepted as if they had been gold.

I have described this work so fully because it throws a flood of light on the whole religious situation in Cuba, and brings our own responsibility as a Church close home to us. This Havana organization has sprung out of the work of Indiana Yearly Meeting in Mexico, and has providentially opened the door for us in the Cuban capital.

The readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND are already aware of the interest which L. D. Baker, president of the Boston Fruit Co., now the United Fruit Co., has shown in having us open religious and educational work in connection with their operations in the province of Santiago. This we ought to do at once. They already have some two thousand employees at work on their estates, near Banes, on the north side of the island, opposite Santiago. They are putting their workmen into good cottages at Banes, much like American cottages. The field here for religious work is new, and the opportunity for spiritual help to the people most promising. It is not probable that any other opening in Cuba affords such rare opportunities as this. We ought to have a young man and wife there at once, and not let the favorable moment pass by. We shall need a building at Banes for religious and school purposes, as there is nothing in existence for the purpose. It need not be expensive, but ought to be neat and modern. Governor General Brooke strongly advised me that we should have new buildings at the principal points of our work.

But the opening is as great and pressing all over the province as it is at Banes. As is the case in every part of the island, there is not a city or town in the province which does not need religious work immediately. In a few of them the Baptists have already begun work, but in most of them there is none at all. They offer as virgin soil for religious work as does the land of more than half the province for industrial effort. The province is a very healthy one in most parts, and the population was described to me as possibly above the average for the island in ability and capacity for development.

If we are to operate successfully in this province we shall be obliged to make Santiago our headquarters. So I was told by all of whom I inquired. It is the natural capital and chief seat of influence, not only of the province, but of the whole east end of the island. It is the chief seat of Catholicism in Cuba, having a cathedral and an archbishop. The Baptists and the Southern Methodists have already opened work in Santiago, and have had excellent success for the time they have been there. But there is ample room for us, as Dr. Moseley, the Baptist missionary, told me. The city has a population of 43,000, not over two or three thousand of whom have as yet been reached in any way by the two organizations already at work. I visited their workers, and made most careful inquiries of them. They will heartily welcome our co-operation.

Two things they emphasized to me: One was that we should have a good, strong man at the head of the work. Whoever is sent by our Board to Santiago ought, in my judgment, to be made superintendent of all work in the east end of the island. He should have a wife as capable as himself, and should have such a knowledge of Spanish as to be able to get the practical use of it quickly. There will be need, in addition, of other workers, both young men and young women. Another thing was emphasized—namely, that we should buy property and build or reconstruct something suited to our purposes. This the Baptists are doing. Rent is high in Santiago, and we could not get anything suitable for less than fifty or sixty dollars per month. We cannot open our work in Santiago without heavy expense. We shall need not less than ten thousand dollars with which to buy ground and construct a building suitable for church and school purposes and a home for our workers. This once done, the work could afterwards be carried on at comparatively small cost. This may seem a large outlay, but it seems to me that we ought to make it without hesitation. This would give us a strong vantage ground in the chief center of influence, and from there we could easily carry our work into all other parts of the province. I made careful inquiry as to cost per year of workers. We cannot allow less than five hundred dollars per worker. It will probably take more.

I submit all these matters to our members everywhere, that they may understand the greatness of the opening which the Lord has made for us, the seriousness of the responsibility laid upon us, and the necessity of steps being taken immediately to raise the necessary funds with which to begin work. I trust that all the members of the seven yearly meetings which have decided to co-operate in the work, and of all the others, may seriously consider their duty and privilege in the matter. Funds contributed by meetings, Sabbath schools or individuals can be placed in the hands of the treasurer of the Missionary Committee of the Yearly Meeting, to be forwarded to the treasurer of the American Friends' Board of Foreign Missions, for this work. If each of the more than one thousand congregations of Friends in the United States would contribute ten dollars, the work could open rightly at once. I very much hope, however, that some Friends, whom the Lord has blessed with ample means, will let us have the ten thousand dollars needed for building and grounds in Santiago, so that all the ordinary contributions may go to the support of workers. A great blessing will rest upon any who may decide to aid in this liberal way. I have already more than one thousand dollars in my hands with which to begin work at Banes, so soon as the Board selects the proper persons to send.

I am writing this article on my way home from Cuba, and hope that when I arrive home the A. F.

B. F. M. may have completed its organization and be ready for work. There will be no lack of missionaries when we are ready to send them out and furnish buildings where they can work. Several have already offered their services. I do not wish us to be in undue haste, but my visit to Cuba has made it clear to me that in this matter the King's business requires a haste which we have not been accustomed to make. Every day of delay will probably make our entrance into Cuba more difficult, for others may pass into the fields which properly belong to us, which the Lord has clearly opened to us.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

NORWAY IN WINTER.

BY JOHN F. HANSON.

Much has been written about the land of the midnight sun, and many glowing accounts in notes of travel, describing wonderful scenery and delightful summer climate. At the present there is much to bring the counterpart into prominence, showing the contrast.

With the last of September the tourists that come to this shore for the few short midsummer months will, like the migratory birds, have gone south. The mountains begin to whiten with the new snow, the forests put on their autumn tints, the birch foliage turns yellow or red, and, mingled with the pine and fir, presents a gorgeous hue way up the mountain side.

But this time of year the days shorten very fast, and wet or cloudy, as a rule, for "autumn days; the saddest of the year," are such here with emphasis; winter follows on apace, dark and stormy.

This whole rock-cribbed west coast presents a majestic spectacle in time of storm, billows in their fury breaking over shoals and climbing up rocky sides, lashing the sea into foam; storm and gale follow each other in succession.

Every winter hardy sailors and fishermen find watery graves. It is no uncommon thing for fishermen and pilots to pass the night and day from five to fifteen English miles out from the coast in considerable storms, with comparative ease, in open boats; but there are sometimes storms which few boats could weather, and coast steamers stay in harbor many hours together, waiting for the storm to abate. Such a gale has lately visited this coast; the oldest inhabitant does not remember its like. In the Romsdal district many fishermen were quite a distance out from land when they were overtaken by the storm, when over 200 men perished, the sea swamping the fishing boats. These men would be largely heads of families and breadwinners, upon whom many families were dependent. The distress and suffering is great, and there is a general response over the country to alleviate, as much as possible, the needs of the widows and orphans. On the same night a party of thirty people, in a fishing boat, were returning from a burial, and while on their way home to the island of Röver, ten English miles from Nongersund and fifty north of Stavenger, were caught in the same gale; the boat was foundered and all on board perished. It took nearly all the able-bodied men on the island. The writer of this has just visited the island and distributed certain funds collected for the benefit of the widows and children, visiting the homes and holding meetings with them, and dispensing the comfort and consolation of the Gospel amid those heartrending scenes. The shadow of a great affliction is here, for which only the Gospel of Jesus is sufficient.

The burial customs of this country are as heavy and unwieldy as those of the Middle Ages, from which they spring. Burial grounds must be consecrated, and at an ordinary state church burial a priest must officiate, and three shovelfuls of earth must be cast by the priest on the coffin, with the words, "From earth thou was taken, to earth thou shall return, and from earth thou shall arise." This, with considerable more ceremony, is supposed to contain the virtue of "a Christian burial." If, however, the relatives of the deceased are too poor to afford the services of the priest at the burial, then a pole is held upright while the grave is filled, and which, when the pole is pulled up, leaves a hole down to the coffin, where the priest can put down a little earth with the ceremony at his own convenience, when he happens to be at the burial place—it may be a week or a month after the burial. It is this antiquated custom that necessitates long and dangerous voyages from one island, or a remote part of a parish to a place of burial properly consecrated and in reach of the priest. The simple practices of Friends' burials form a striking contrast and a useful object lesson.

After spending the summer among the country meetings we are now finding an open door in the Stavanger Meeting and various lines of religious work; especially do the parlor meetings of evenings seem to reach and save souls.

In respect to the peace work, compared with a year ago, when it was high tide, it may be said to be at a low ebb. Conditions have changed since last year, when the Tzar's manifesto was so readily received and acted upon, and the nations were brought into line with the proposition.

If the press of all parties and shades of belief is any indication of public opinion, there is a great change from last year. The treatment of Finland by the Tzar is considered inexplicable. The constitutional rights of Finland have been unmercifully trampled under foot. Public opinion, wherever expressed, condemns the course pursued by America in the Philippines, and by England in the Transvaal, while arbitration and professional justice is looked upon as a hollow pretence. Congresses, parliaments and legislatures are at the mercy of military intrigue. Future proceedings along peace lines must be by appeal to the conscience of the common people; they must be taught that human life is too precious to be sacrificed in defence of any country or its pretended honor. The sacredness of human life is above flags and the glitter of national glory.

A singular feature of the changed conditions is the exodus of the young men subject to military service in Finland. None are advising the Finns to fight for their rights, but there is general approbation of the wholesale exodus. The cause seems hopeless, or that land is not worth shedding blood for. So, in the near future, Finland may be completely "Russified." The lamb that has lain so securely in the bear's bosom is only changing position—going on the inside—and who cares? The great nations stand by and take it philosophically; the small Scandinavian countries have a fit of ague over it, for they think some nice day the great powers may decide to keep the peace of the world by allowing Russia to make a repast of Scandinavia. And is not the peace of the world already assured? Did not the American Ambassador say, the other day, in his speech in England, "That the sure friendship now existing between America and England was England's last and greatest victory, which means peace between all great powers."

There seems to be needed just now an educational crusade to convince such as the Philippines and the Transvaal that the greatest honor of all their history will be the privilege of lying down—inside—these great powers that are pledged to maintain the peace of the world.

LETTER OF THANKS FROM THE DOUKHOBORS.

North Colony of Thunderhill,
Manitoba, Canada, N. A., 3d Dec., 1899.

From the Christian Community of the Universal Brotherhood, Peace and blessing of God be with you, never-to-be-forgotten-in our souls—brothers and sisters in Christ—of the Christian Community (of Friends and others).

We don't know all your names, but we pray our dear friends, Joseph S. Elkinton and William Evans, to transmit our love and our best greetings to all our brothers all together. We kiss you with our fraternal kiss and embrace you from all our heart in our minds.

We are very sorry that we are not with you, but for the Spirit there are no barriers.

We can live separately and in the spirit we will be united, and that is said from both sides (by us and you); there will be the Christian love, and where is the Christian love there is God Himself.

For the love towards brothers, there is no space too large; neither large countries nor oceans can separate the spirits of the brothers which have Christian love between themselves, for such love all is near enough and all is sufficient.

The people who have the Christian love do not care for their own needs; they have more care for their brothers—clothing, feeding and consoling them.

We see such a Christian love from you towards us in this so difficult (for us) time of persecution and emigration to a new country. You have made our brothers very happy, and a few days ago we received from you clothing, flour, oats, soap, wool and milk for our children; also beans, peas, sugar, tea, etc.

We have divided all with the South Colony. The North Colony received the third part of the goods you have sent. We have received before many things from you, and all our brothers and sisters, our children and old people, thank you from all their heart, all you brothers and sisters. God bless you in this life and in the future, that because you don't forget your suffering brothers our Lord will not forget you, too, in the time you will need.

Your benefactions are not to the people only, but to the Lord Himself, for who loves his brother loves God, and who hates his brother hates God and His law, and persecutes the people who have faith in God and torments them and keeps them in prison.

But there are kind brothers, too, who do all in their power to make their brothers free to let them see their suffering families, and these brothers are assisting others in every need. Write us, dear brothers, how you are and how keeps your life in our Lord these days.

We communicate you that we are now pretty well, thank God! (notwithstanding many in the South Colony are suffering from scurvy and malarial fever).

We don't lose the courage after our suffering. We hope always for the grace from God.

We kiss you once more, dear brothers and sisters, with our fraternal kiss, and send you our best greetings.

The brothers and sisters of the Christian Community of the Universal Brotherhood.

BOOK NOTES.

"Sandwort," verses by Anna J. Granniss. Keene, N. H., 1898. Third thousand. Anna J. Granniss, Plainfield, Conn. 50 cents.

"Shots at Random," by Howell Stroud, England. New York: J. S. Ogilvie Pub. Co. (1899).

We have placed these two books together because, though very different, they belong to the same large class of verse, as distinguished from poetry in the highest sense.

"Sandwort" is a little volume of unpretending verse; it is marked by simplicity and true feeling. The author shows a genuine love for nature and a poetic appreciation of its beauties. There is a current of tender sentiment all through the volume which will appeal to many hearts.

"Shots at Random," as its name indicates, covers a much wider field. Some of the pieces were written for reunions and like occasions, and so appeal to special audiences rather than to the public, who cannot be expected to appreciate the allusions, which give the real point to the verses.

The writer has facility in writing verses, and his lines compare favorably with other "Occasional Verses," as they used to call them fifty years or more ago.

The International Lesson.

FIRST QUARTER

Lesson I.

First month 7th, 1900.

THE BIRTH OF JESUS.

Luke 2: 1-16.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Thou shalt call his name Jesus: for he shall save his people from their sins.—Matt. 1: 21.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, First mo. 1.—The birth of Jesus. Luke 2: 1-16.
Third-day, First mo. 2.—The Prince of Peace. Isa. 9: 1-6.
Fourth-day, First mo. 3.—Good Tidings. Isa. 40: 1-11.
Fifth-day, First mo. 4.—The Word made Flesh. John 1: 1-14.
Sixth-day, First mo. 5.—A faithful saying. 1 Tim. 1: 12-17.
Seventh-day, First mo. 6.—The Life Giver. 2 Tim. 1: 1-10.
First-day, First mo. 7.—The Saviour of the World. 1 John 4: 9-14.

For the next eighteen months the International Lessons are upon the life of Christ. Familiar as are the main features of the story, there will always be to the one rightly approaching the subject new beauties, new teachings, new help, new revelations of the love of God.

Luke, the author of the third gospel, is called "the beloved physician" (Col. 4: 14). He was not one of the twelve apostles, but was an "apostolic man." In his preface (1: 1-4) he implies that he was not an eyewitness, but states that he "traced the course of all things accurately from the first" (1: 3, Revised Version). He also distinctly tells us that there were other writings in existence which attempted to relate the life of Christ, and implies that his aim was to give an accurate account and to supply details which were missing, and, perhaps, to correct errors.

Luke wrote in Greek, and it is supposed wrote especially for the Hellenic world. It is the Gospel which more than any other represents Jesus as the Saviour of the world. Christ is represented "as the Good Physician and the Saviour of mankind." The keynote of this gospel is, "The Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost."

We know little of Luke. It seems from Col. 4: 11-14 that he was not a Jew, but a proselyte. His name is only mentioned in the New Testament three times; in Colossians, as above; in 2 Timothy 4: 11, and Philemon 24. He was a follower and companion of the Apostle Paul, and it is to Luke's hand that the book of Acts is usually ascribed. It has been well said of him: "He was an accomplished writer, a close observer, an unassuming historian, a well instructed physician, and a most faithful friend."

The time and manner of Luke's death is unknown. The date of the composition of his gospel is also unknown. It has been placed about 63 A.D., 75-80 A.D., and about 100 A.D. Of these the second is held by some of the best scholars to be the more likely. Of the many interesting peculiarities of the gospel two may be mentioned: (1) the preface (1: 1-4), which gives the object of its composition, and (2) the group of parables in the 15th chapter.

The exact time of the birth of Christ has been the subject of much investigation, but it cannot be determined with precision. There is nothing but tradition to fix the date in December, much less to fix the day of the month. It is now generally agreed that his birth was four years before our Christian era. (That is, the year 1899 should be 1903.) It was not until 533 that the monk Dionysius Exiguus published his calculations upon which our present era is based; it is now known that he made an error of four years. The Christian era was slow in being adopted. Even in England it does not seem to have been generally used until about 815 A.D.

1. "In those days." Before the birth of Christ. "Cæsar Augustus." The then reigning Roman emperor. "All the world." The Roman empire. "Taxed." The Revised Version gives the correct translation, "Enrolled." That is, that a census should be taken. There was no decree for taxation.

2. "This was the first enrolment made when Quirinius was governor of Syria." Revised Version. This statement has caused some difficulty to students of history, but if, as some think, Quirinius was twice governor, all difficulty is removed. Others think that Quirinius completed a census which his predecessor had begun.

3. "To enrol themselves." Revised Version.

4. "Own city." Home of his family. "Lineage." "Family." Revised Version. This was a concession to Jewish prejudice. The Roman was enrolled at his usual place of residence.

5. "Who was bethrothed to him." Revised Version.

7. "Swaddling clothes." These were strips of cloth three or four inches wide and several feet long. "No room." The little town was doubtless crowded by those who had come to be enrolled. It was in Bethlehem that the Messiah was to be born (Micah 5: 2). It is to Luke, who delights to tell of the love and compassion of Jesus towards the poor and needy, that we are indebted for these details so dear to the poor, the humble and the suffering.

8. "Same country." Near Bethlehem. It was here that David kept his flocks (1 Sam. 17: 34, 35). "By night." It is not unusual for flocks to be kept out all night in this part of Palestine.

9. "And an angel of the Lord stood by them." Revised Version. "The glory of the Lord." The shechinah; the brightness which indicates the presence of the Lord. It was not in the second Temple.

10. "Be not afraid." Revised Version. "Good tidings." This is the meaning of the word Gospel. "Great joy." Isa. 53: 7; Rom. 5: 11; 1 Pet. 1: 8.

11. Now follows the reason of this joy—a Saviour is born. Jesus means Saviour. "Christ the Lord." The only place in the Bible where exactly this expression is used, compare Acts 2: 36; Phil. 2: 11; 1 Cor. 12: 3. "City of David." Bethlehem.

12. "The sign." Revised Version. To show the truth of what was said rather than to guide the shepherds. "Ye shall find a babe." Revised Version. Not the babe.

13. "With the angel." It is not stated whether the angels were in the sky or on earth.

14. "Glory to God in the highest. And on earth peace among men in whom He is well pleased." Perhaps no change made by the Revised Version has been less acceptable than this, but, on the whole, the Revisers seem to have the weight on their side. The essential meaning is not changed; peace comes through the Lord Jesus Christ. Rom. 5: 1. "Highest." The heavens as contrasted with the earth.

15. They wish at once to verify the words of the heavenly message.

16. "Found." The word in the original implies finding after search.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. The birth of Christ is the greatest event in history.

2. Gal. 4: 4-7.

3. "It came upon the midnight clear,
That glorious song of old,
From angels bending near the earth
To touch their harps of gold:
"Peace on the earth, good-will to men
From heaven's all-gracious king;"
The world in solemn stillness lay
To hear the angels sing."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR FIRST MONTH 7th, 1900.

PRAYER THAT OBTAINS.

Luke 11: 5-13; 18: 2-5.

Second-day, First mo. 1.—The need of prayer. Ps. 32: 1-7.
Third-day, First mo. 2.—Praying in secret. Matt. 6: 5-8.
Fourth-day, First mo. 3.—Sincere prayer. John 4: 20-24.
Fifth-day, First mo. 4.—Prayer in assemblies. Matt. 18: 15-20.
Sixth-day, First month 5.—Life and prayer. Acts 10: 1-8.
Seventh-day, First mo. 6.—Answers that deny. Lam. 3: 15-27.

These parables contain both comparisons and contrasts. In the first the man goes to his friend, but we go to our Father. The man disturbs his friend at midnight, who is not pleased with such untimely annoyance; but it is never "midnight" with our Father, and our prayers never disturb Him. The man gives only because of importunity, and not for friendship's sake; but our Father gives because of friendship, Fatherhood and importunity.

The prayer that obtains is, in this case, a prayer that is born of our sense of need in the presence of the greater need of another. It takes the needs of others to waken in us the keenest sense of responsibility and of urgency in prayer. We can eat our bread and fall asleep at eventide, but another who has no bread will set us to praying at midnight.

There is a profound spiritual lesson in the parable. That which our Father longs to give to us is the Holy Spirit. For the lack of this supreme gift how often we "have nothing to set before" those who are "out of their way" on the journey of life.

What have we to set before our children, our neighbors, our chance acquaintances, our Sabbath school classes? O let the sense of our need set us to praying midnight prayers! The parable teaches also what Andrew Murray has called the law of prayer—namely, that prayer is answered. Our involuntary thought often is that the answer is uncertain. But God's thought is that prayer shall be answered. Asking, seeking, knocking, shall all be answered.

The second parable presents a regardless judge answering a poor widow in order to save trouble for himself. How much more shall a just and loving God, who cares for His own, answer His own elect? But the parable urges unfainting prayer—sustained faith. In the face of the great problem of permitted and seemingly regnant evil our faith is sorely tried, and there is danger that it may falter and fail while God waits the only safe time to intervene in human affairs. Our prayer is rightly born, but we give it no wings of faith to rise aloft.

The prayer that obtains, we are taught elsewhere, is the prayer that arises from the heart in harmony with the nature of Jesus—that prays in His name; it is the prayer arising from a nature saturated with the words of Christ; it is the prayer of faith; it is the prayer of mutual agreement of two or more in the will of God; it is the prayer of importunity; it is the prayer whose intensity deepens in the face of greater difficulties, that learns that "this kind goeth not out but by much prayer"; it is prayer in the Spirit; it is prayer born of the sense of the Divine Fatherhood; it is the prayer that thinks more of receiving Him than of receiving merely His gifts.

A NEW ENDEAVOR MOVEMENT.

Some time ago the Social Committee of the Christian Endeavor were planning some way to instruct and entertain our young people at the First Friends' Church, Marion, Ind., and at the same time bring about a closer relationship between the older and younger members of the church. A talk was given one evening on "Our Denominational History," which so inspired the committee that they at once set about the organization of a club for the study of our own history. Early in Tenth month a meeting was called and the organization effected. At each meeting some one reads a strong paper on some important part of our history, and another person brings out by questions a great many other interesting features along the same line of thought. The meetings of the club occur once a month, and three public meetings are arranged for extra. Several months will be spent on a careful, systematic study of the rise and progress of our Society down to the present time. The program just recently published shows the year's work to be as follows: Eleventh month 16th, paper, "The Political, Social and Religious Causes which Produced the Friends." Twelfth month 15th, Whittier evening—pub-lie meeting (a special programme); Twelfth month 21st, paper, "George Fox"; First month 18th, paper, "William Penn; Short Sketches of Daniel Hill's Life"; Second month 15th, "Distinguishing Principles and Doctrines of Friends"; Third month 15th, "Friends as Leaders of Reform"; Fourth month 19th, "Friends in Art and Science; Sketches from Life of Joseph Moore"; Fourth month 20th, "The Revival Movement Among Friends, and Its Relation to the Present and Future of the Church" (a public meeting); Fifth month 17th, "Among Friends' Books."

Another public meeting is arranged for, but the subject to be discussed has not yet been selected.

A very great interest is being taken in the work, and we believe much good will be accomplished.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

We are glad to heartily commend the report of a new movement in Endeavor work from Marion, Indiana. It is the practical working out of ideas held more or less clearly by many of us, but in no other case, so far as the writer knows, put in such practical form. The plan, in its general features, is worthy of adoption everywhere, and will do much to foster that spirit of church loyalty fundamental to Christian Endeavor, and also to remedy the lamentable ignorance of our own denominational history and work. We hope, at no distant day, to see something of this sort adopted as a general course of study in all our societies.

A WATCHWORD FOR THE NEW YEAR.

There are hundreds—yes, thousands—of our Endeavorers for whom the best watchword for another year will be the word "Preparation." The person who does not "prepare himself" is the one who does not do his Master's will, and who shall be beaten with many stripes. The doctrine of the endowment with power by the Holy Spirit is most perniciously held when it becomes a substitute for careful, prayerful preparation for efficient service. The Holy Spirit was not given to enable men to live in the realm of the wonderful, but in the realm of the practical. The signs and wonders of the early chapters of the Acts are the incidental manifestations of His coming. The deeper unities of life in the spirit, the perfection of Christian character as seen in 1 Corinthians, 13th chapter; the fruit of the Spirit as given in Galatians, the supremacy of love as the proof of discipleship—these are the permanent work of the Spirit in the church. The gift of tongues at Pentecost never relieved anybody from the necessity of learning foreign languages in order to preach the Gospel to the heathen, nor did the witness of the Spirit to the preached word ever relieve anybody from the necessity of careful preparation in order to preach the word. Our Christian Endeavor prayer meetings for 1900 will be worth about as much to us as our preparation for them costs us. Preparation does not mean simply learning something to say. That may be and often is the laziest kind of shirking. But it means such a careful, thoughtful study of the topic as will give us thoughts of our own from which the Spirit of God may choose, or upon the basis of which He may give new thoughts for our public service.

Quite too often our committee work is done in a shameless, slovenly manner. There is no thorough study of its significance and possibility. The worst of this is that it does not end here. It is the formation of habits in Christian work that will remain with us throughout life. Dr. Parkhurst has well said that "after all, it is the man who knows" that God calls into His service.

THE ORIGIN AND GROWTH OF EDUCATION AMONG FRIENDS IN WESTERN INDIANA.

BY HARLOW LINDLEY.

The school at Bloomingdale was opened to both sexes, Eleventh month 23d, 1846, with forty-two pupils in attendance, under the direction of Harvey Thomas.

The first report of the Superintending Committee reads as follows:

"To the quarterly meeting, Second month 13th, 1847:

"A school was opened at our new school house, with 42 pupils, on the 23d of Eleventh month, under the care of a few Friends appointed by this committee, and Harvey Thomas as principal teacher. The subscription has since been increased to 53, but as one of the pupils has deceased and several others have had to leave the school on account of bodily indisposition, the number is reduced to 46.

"In about two weeks after the school commenced, Emily Clark was employed as assistant teacher. The acting committee has visited the school once a month, and it appears that the school has been well conducted and orderly; and the advancement of the students in literary pursuits has, with but few exceptions, met our most sanguine expectations. It was a cause, however, of humility and mortification to the acting committee to witness at the opening of the school an appearance in regard to deportment and apparel which, in the opinion of the committee, is entirely at variance with the principles of our society and of the fundamental rules of the school. From this circumstance it may readily be discovered that the committee was introduced into a state of close trial at the very commencement of its labors; but as several of the pupils had entered the school who had not been duly apprised of the requisitions of the rules of the school, and at the same time, perhaps, had nothing about them that had not been admitted by their parents and friends at home, the committee soon came to the conclusion that under the circumstances it would not be best to reject them; and in accordance with this conclusion they were admitted with the understanding, however, that they were to conform to the requisitions of this particular rule of the school as soon as their circumstances would reasonably admit. The acting committee has since had several opportunities of counseling with the pupils upon this subject, and with separate parcels of them, and also with a considerable number of their parents, and on these occasions a favorable disposition was generally manifested, and we may, with a degree of pleasure, state that several of the students have, in the opinion of the committee, made considerable improvement in their appearance by changing their manner of dress, and others still seem to manifest a willingness to do so as soon as they consistently can.

Notwithstanding these favorable symptoms, the committee is under the painful necessity of informing the meeting that several of the pupils do not yet appear in a consistent dress, and that quite a large number of the boys seem to persist in wearing their hair in an unbecoming manner, contrary to the known wishes of the committee. As we apprehend that there will have been sufficient opportunity against the commencement of our next school session for a general acquaintance with our school rules, it is the expectation of the committee that in all future sessions a strict observance of the rules of plainness will be required.

"As there has not been any arrangement made for the introduction of manual labor into our school, the institution has as yet been almost exclusively confined to a course of book learning, and the physical exercise almost exclusively to that of walking to and from school; the boys, however, have been engaged during vacation, to some extent, in preparing wood for the use of the school. The committee is desirous that Friends may not lose sight of this very important and distinguishing feature of our quarterly meeting school—that of conducting it on the manual labor system—nor relax in their exertions until it is completely introduced in consequence of this feature, as we believe there is now, agreeably to the information lately received, in the hands of Isaiah Foster and others of England, subject to the direction of this committee, a donation for the promotion of this institution, the sum of £100 sterling (about $485.00), which sum, with such addition as we apprehend might consistently be made to it by Friends of our quarterly meeting, might be so applied as to enable us to put our school into full operation sooner than we had anticipated.

"For the information of Friends we may state that the next session of our school is expected to commence on Second-day after our next quarterly meeting, in the Fifth month, and the committee has ascertained that such boys and girls as may desire to avail themselves of the benefits of our school from a distance can have board at 75 cents per week, and can get employment at reasonable wages, say from 3 cents to 6 cents per hour, so that pupils may, by laboring from three to four hours each day, pay their board and washing, and at the same time promote their bodily health and mental vigor.

"Signed on behalf of the committee,

"JAMES SILER, Clerk."

This report gives some idea of the care and anxiety with which Friends regarded the school and its interests.

The name "Western Agricultural School" was often used, and the reports were early presented under this heading.

The following report of the Superintending Committee, made Fifth month 8th, 1847, about six months after the opening of the school, is of interest in connection with the progress being made.

The committee reports "That after making our last report, the school continued and closed to good satisfaction on the 17th of last month, which was well attended by the patrons and friends of the institution. The students manifested an accurate knowledge in most cases of the various branches they had studied during the school, by their prompt and correct answers to the various questions put to them by the principal and by some of the by-standers. In consequence of the limited means placed at the disposal of the committee, they have been unable to advance to much extent in that part of the original plan, which relates to manual labor connected with agriculture; yet nevertheless, in order to carry out that feature of the institution as far as practicable, they proceeded some time previous to the termination of the former school, to rent the farm to Harvey Thomas at $2.00 per acre, to be paid by the making of rails, enclosing said farm, etc., with the express understanding that he was to give employment to such boys as wished it, at reasonable wages; consequently towards the termination of said school, many of the boys were employed in making rails, building fence, clearing off the ground ready for the plow, etc., thereby paying a considerable sum toward their tuition, without impeding their literary studies. The service of the assistant teacher was dispensed with for about three weeks previous to the termination of the school in consequence of several students having left school in order to attend to various domestic concerns; hence, the salary of the assistant only amounted to $27.19, making the amount due the principal and assistant, $277.19, which we believe the school subscription will pay, and, perhaps, a small amount over, but as there will have to be in many instances, deducting more in consequence of students being detained at home by sickness, the committee has not as yet been able to ascertain the precise amount due for tuition. Shortly after last quarterly meeting the committee received a communication from Isaiah Foster, informing us that £100 sterling, raised by Friends in England in aid of Western Agricultural School, was ready, and requested that we draw for the same without delay; accordingly we forwarded to him an order directing that the same be forwarded to Edward and Charles Yarnell, of Philadelphia, to be retained by them subject to our order.

"Signed on behalf of the committee,

"JAMES SILER, Clerk."

The report of the summer session of 1847, shows an attendance of 34, 11 of whom studied algebra, several geometry, astronomy, chemistry and natural philosophy, and others of the common branches. The statement was made that several were poor scholars, and were very unused to study on entering the school. Some manual labor work had been regularly carried on, both among the boys and among the girls. The committee reported that "on the whole, we consider it pretty well proved that the young men laboring four hours per day can pay all expenses of board, wash-in and tuition, and at the same time pursue their studies with as much success as though they did not labor. . . . The committee confidently believe that the manual labor idea, when completely carried out, will fully equal the most sanguine expectations of its friends; that it will, at but little expense, furnish our youth with a good education and at the same time, promote health, habits of industry, frugality and a knowledge of agriculture."

The manual labor idea was first carried out by the students raising a large crop of onions, but leaving school before marketing time, the result was not very satisfactory, financially. The result of the next year's attempt at this system was no more satisfactory.

AN INTERESTING EPISODE FROM THE LAST CENTURY.

[Augustine Jones, of Providence, R. I., has found the following interesting facts in the early records of the New England Meeting for Sufferings.—Ed.]

The Yearly Meeting of Friends for New England was held during the three years—1777, 1778, 1779—at the Upper and Lower Smithfield Meeting Houses, in Rhode Island, and at the Brick Meeting House at Uxbridge, Mass., near by. That is to say, certain sessions of the meeting during the week were held in each of the three houses. This was during the Revolutionary war. Friends on the island of Rhode Island were unable to attend the meeting, as they could not pass the lines.

The following copy from the records of the Meeting for Sufferings of New England Yearly Meeting, Seventh month 11th, 1781, may be interesting to New England Friends and others:

"This Meeting, being informed that our Meeting House at Newport is yet in part occupied by the French army, although the Monthly Meeting of Rhode Island by their Committee had used endeavors to have it cleared. The matter being considered and it appearing to be incumbent on us to hold up our Christian Testimony by remonstrating against our houses of worship being used for the purposes of war and the Yearly, Quarterly, and Rhode Island Monthly Meeting being much incommoded and injured thereby, our Friends David Buffum, Moses Brown, Isaac Lawton, Jacob Mott, Joseph Mitchell, Thomas Hazard and Thomas Aldrich are appointed a Committee to weightily attend to our testimony herein and move for its support, by making application to the Commander in Chief of the French Army, or to the Governor, Council or House of Assembly if occasion require as Truth may open the way."

This committee reported at the Meeting for Sufferings on the 31st of Eighth month, 1781, as follows:

"The Committee appointed to hold up our Testimony against our meeting houses being used for the purposes of war and to make application for the possession of that at Newport report:—that they waited on the Governor and represented the case to him, whereupon he wrote to the commanding officer of the French Army at Newport inclosing the Committee's letter and uniting his endeavors for the clearing the house, that the French officers respectfully treated those of the Committee that waited on them and according to assurances then given caused the house to be cleared and in a few days, the key to be delivered up, and the house in our quiet possession."

News from the Field.

A strong appeal has been issued, calling for contributions for the support of White's Institute at Wabash, Ind. The building was destroyed by fire last winter, and has been rebuilt at great expense. It is a work which should appeal to Friends everywhere, and we hope that the call for help will meet a generous response.

The last shipment of goods sent to Canada for the Doukhobors consisted of 9,300 pounds cotton-seed oil, 9,030 pounds ready-made clothing, 1,975 pounds washed wool, 1,874 pounds leather for shoes, 351 pounds findings for shoes, 959 pounds blankets, 4,000 pounds barley, 2,311 pounds tea, 1,834 pounds cheese, 30 ounces quinine and 80 pounds of other medicines, 2 dozen Russian-English dictionaries, 2 barrels dishes, 18 boxes malted milk, 879 pounds groceries, 346 pounds salt, one spinning wheel, one ox yoke, one box knives and forks. Friends are now about to purchase a large number of spinning wheels, so that the women can spin the wool and make the necessary garments.

Isaac Sharpless, of Haverford College, has prepared a history of Pennsylvania. The manuscript was in the hands of the publishers, J. B. Lippincott Company, at the time of the fire which destroyed their building in Philadelphia. We are glad to say that President Sharpless's manuscript was in the fireproof vault, and has come out unharmed.

We have received advance sheets of Friends' Pocket Almanac for 1900, published by Friends' Book and Tract Committee, 51 Fifth Avenue, New York City. It has assisted us very much in preparing the statistics of Friends which appear in this present issue. It is an exceedingly valuable publication, and almost indispensable to an interested Friend. It gives the date and location of all the yearly meetings, and the time of holding all the quarterly meetings, besides much other valuable information. The price is only 5 cents.

We gather the following interesting items from the Friends' Pocket Almanac. The present membership of London Yearly Meeting is 17,031, including 762 persons resident in other countries. Dublin Yearly Meeting has a membership of 2,586. There are on the continent 198 Friends—20 in Germany, 20 in France, 66 in Denmark, 82 in Norway, and 10 in Turkey. There are 492 in Australasia. The total number of Friends in the world who have a membership in the yearly meetings which correspond is 113,560. There are 1,334 meetings for worship, 584 monthly meetings, and 156 quarterly meetings. The whole number of recorded ministers is 1,694. There are 1,234 Bible Schools under the care of Friends, with a total enrollment of 101,268.

We are glad to announce that W. Irving Kelsey's wife, whose serious illness was reported in this paper, has undergone an operation in the Presbyterian Hospital, Chicago. The operation was entirely satisfactory, and the patient is doing very well.

William L. Pearson has the following interesting item in the "Saturday Evening Globe," of Oskaloosa, Iowa:

According to the Bristol "Times and Mirror" the Queen Victoria Diamond Jubilee Convalescent Home was opened at Bristol, England, November 15th, the more notable on account of the Queen's presence. The initiatory steps to build were taken in 1897, sixty years after her accession to the throne. Prominent among the originators of this great institution, costing $500,000, was Joseph Storrs Fry, a number of years Clerk of London Yearly Meeting of Friends, and well known in this country through his visits to various yearly meetings, being also a delegate to the General Conference of Friends in 1887. His seems to be the largest individual gift, $60,000. "In sending his handsome check for $50,000, to which he afterwards added $10,000, in his quiet, unassuming way, J. S. Fry wrote: 'Personally I felt thankful to be permitted to have some share in the establishment of the Convalescent Home, believing that it will be a fitting memorial to the long reign of our beloved Queen, and also a source of permanent benefit to the suffering poor of Bristol, a city to which my great-grandfather came last century, and with the interests of which the family to which I belong have been so long connected.'" J. S. Fry has long been the senior member of the firm of J. S. Fry & Sons, cocoa manufacturers, and is a philanthropist and an acceptable minister in the Society of Friends. More than once he has cheerfully contributed to the necessities of Penn College, helping towards some $25,000 given, first and last, by English and Irish Friends. "The Times and Mirror" refers also to Bristol General Hospital, built some fifty years ago, and says, "We owe this charity to prominent members of the Society of Friends, notably Joseph Eaton and George Thomas."

One is perforce reminded of the many benevolent and charitable institutions partly or wholly established by Friends in the cities of England and of the Eastern states. The number and character of those about Philadelphia, whose origin, endowment and administration are due to members of the Society of Friends, are, or should be, well known. They date back to the days of Benjamin Franklin, who laid the foundation of Pennsylvania University.

CANADA YEARLY MEETING.

West Lake Quarterly Meeting was held at Wooler. Meeting of Ministry and Oversight commenced on Sixth-day, Twelfth month 1st, 1899.

The presence of the great Master of assemblies was manifest in all the sessions. We were greatly encouraged by the loving counsel of our friend, Elwood Scott, from Carthage, Indiana, who has come to us in the fulness of the blessing of the Gospel of Christ. Seventh-day we were favored in worship and also in transacting the affairs of the church. In the evening a liberal collection was received in a meeting of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society.

On Sabbath the Gospel stream flowed in the midst of a large and appreciative audience. The evening meeting was crowned by one precious soul being set at liberty. A series of meetings followed the close of the quarterly meeting. In these thirsty souls heard and obeyed the call to come unto Jesus and drink, causing God's children here to rejoice, while there was joy in heaven over repentant sinners.

At Wooler Monthly Meeting, which occurred during the progress of these meetings, twelve were received into membership. Our brother, Elwood Scott, proceeds to visit Moscow Meeting and others in remote localities. E. C. GARRATT.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING.

William P. Haworth and wife, Abigail C. Haworth, of Miami, Indian Territory, have just closed a series of meetings at this place, which resulted in eleven definite conversions and two renewals, besides many believers being greatly strengthened, and many backsliders and sinners coming under deep conviction for sin. The preaching and teaching was clear, forcible and with power, and presented the Gospel in all its beauty and preciousness. There were four accessions to the church. They will begin a series of meetings at Elwood, near here, on the 29th instant.

Georgetown, Ill.

CLARK BROWN.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING.

Salem Quarterly Meeting, Iowa, began Sixth-day morning, the 24th inst., with a meeting for the consideration of higher criticism and other subjects. In the afternoon the Meeting on Ministry and Oversight was held. On Seventh-day we had a good meeting for worship and church business. Albert Bond, a minister, was liberated for gospel service in Iowa and Indiana. A meeting for worship was held in the evening. On First-day morning a large Sabbath school convened. The Temperance lesson, containing the prohibition, "Look not thou upon the wine when it is red," was considered not sufficient to prevent drunkenness among the unsaved in Iowa, and that all our church members should use the ballot and their influence to abolish the manufacture of intoxicants for beverages. A large meeting for worship followed, then a praise service in the afternoon, led by Sister Page, who, with her husband, Thomas Page, have returned after a two years' vacation to the charge of White's Institute. In the evening another meeting for worship closed the occasion. Eight of our ministers and a majority of our workers were present at most of those sessions, and a fair attendance of other members. Morris Lemon, with a minute from Cedar Meeting, near Oskaloosa, led in most of the services, to the instruction and edification of the church.

On Seventh-day, before proceeding with the business meeting, a memorial service was devoted to the review of the life of Willet Dorland, deceased, who, in an early day, was a member of this meeting. His eminent usefulness as Overseer, Elder, Clerk, Superintendent of our first Scripture School, and other duties placed upon him by the church were affectionately recalled by our older members. He was well equipped in mind and heart for civil, as well as religious, service, using the ballot to the glory of God, being an earnest advocate of our first State prohibitory liquor law. He maintained his high moral convictions in the Legislature, pressing measures then which only of late years are seen to be wise and beneficial. Of a modest, backward demeanor, he was no place-seeker, preferring others to himself. His work elsewhere, later in life, for the spread of light and knowledge in the church through the ministry, establishment of a Friends' Publishing Association, the Sabbath School Quarterly, and papers, met with the cordial sympathy of his earlier coworkers, as we counted him one of us still. As an all round Christian citizen and builder in the church of Christ, we have observed but few his peer. He early entered the Master's vineyard, and these gifts were bestowed because of his singleness of purpose, and we make this expression to honor and thank the Head of all things for the gift of such a life to His church.

Des Moines Quarterly Meeting was held at Des Moines, Iowa, Eleventh month 24-26. The quarterly meeting was one of the largest and best for some time. The power of God was manifest, and the word had free course and was glorified. The spirit of liberty was surely in the gathering, and many expressed thanks for the blessed fellowship. William J. Thornberry, from Indiana, was present and enjoyed the liberty in Christian service.

ROSY COLOR.

Produced by Postum Food Coffee.

"When a person rises from each meal with a ringing in the ears and a general sense of nervousness, it is a common habit to charge it to a deranged stomach.

"I found it was caused from drinking coffee, which I never suspected for a long time, but found by leaving off coffee that the disagreeable feelings went away.

"I was brought to think of the subject by getting some Postum Food Coffee, and this brought me out of the trouble.

"It is a most appetizing and invigorating beverage, and has been of such great benefit to me that I naturally speak of it from time to time as opportunity offers.

"A lady friend complained to me that she had tried Postum, but it did not taste good. In reply to my question she said she guessed she boiled it about ten minutes. I advised her to follow directions and know that she boiled it fifteen or twenty minutes, and she would have something worth talking about. A short time ago I heard one of her children say that they were drinking Postum now-a-days, so I judge she succeeded in making it good, which is by no means a difficult task.

"Tom O'Brien, the son of a friend who lives on Bridge Street, was formerly a pale lad, but since he has been drinking Postum has a fine color. There is plenty of evidence that Postum actually does 'make red blood,' as the famous trade mark says."—Jno. Chambers, 9 Franklin Street, Dayton, Ohio.

Married.

BURGES—HELTON.—Married, at the home of the bride's parents, Wm. and Sarah Helton, Charlie Burges and Sibyl J. Helton, all of Jewell County, Kansas.

HAWORTH—HOLLOWELL.—At the home of Theodore and Alice Haworth, near Argonia, Kansas, Tenth month 18th, 1899, William W. Haworth to Ethel B. Hollowell. Both are members of Argonia Monthly Meeting.

Died.

ADELL.—Died, Eleventh month 28th, 1899, in his 26th year, Arthur J. Adell, son of William T. and Mary R. Adell. His last days were accompanied with much suffering, which he bore with patience and Christian fortitude, often saying Jesus was precious to him now. Thus he fell asleep in Jesus.

BETTLES.—On Fifth-day, Eleventh month 9th, 1899, at his residence, Morgan Park, near Chicago, William Bettles, aged 70 years. He was one of the organizers of Chicago Meeting, a constant distributor of tracts and other literature, and a man of warm Christian love.

CARMAN.—Died, at his home, near Mecklenberg, N. Y., of pneumonia, Fourth month 9th, 1899, Thomas Carman, aged nearly 84 years. He was a birthright member of Scipio Quarterly Meeting, and for many years an Elder of Hector Monthly Meeting.

COLEMAN.—Susan Coleman, daughter of Robert and Anna Ellis, died in Marion, Indiana, Eleventh month 24th, 1899, aged 79 years. For nearly forty years she labored faithfully for her Master.

COX.—Avis M., daughter of Joshua and Rachel Cox, of Varck, Kansas, died Tenth month 30th, 1899, aged nearly 27 years. She had strong sympathies and was well endowed with gifts for service.

GOURLEY.—Jane Gourley, Glen's Falls, New York, died Eleventh month 23d, aged 84 years.

GREENE.—Asa B. Greene, at the home of his daughter, Mary G. Sprague, in Spencer, Iowa, on Sixth month 5th, 1899. He bore a long and painful illness with Christian patience, and was prepared to go.

HARVEY.—Marietta M. Harvey, daughter of Dr. Edmund and Sophia Albertson, died at her home in Canton, Ind., Ninth month 19th, 1899, aged 59 years and 19 days. For many years her life was one of peculiar trial; but she was naturally hopeful, and much knew how brave a heart and steadfast courage she possessed.

JEWELL.—Moses Beede Jewell, son of the late Henry Jewell, Sr., and Cynthia Beede, his wife, died at his home, in East Farnham, P. Q., Canada, Tenth month 12th, 1899, aged 70 years. He was a birthright member of Farnham Monthly Meeting of Friends, and a man of sterling principles. He held the office of secretary and treasurer for the township of East Farnham during an unbroken period of forty-two years consecutively, from his first appointment to said office to the close of his life.

MEADER.—Daniel Meader, died at his home, in Rochester, N. H., Seventh month 28th, 1899, aged nearly 89 years. He was a birthright member of Friends, many years an elder, and much attached to the principles of Friends, and gave evidence of a preparation for the life to come.

MORGAN.—Lester W. H., son of B. F. and Alice Morgan, members of White Lick Monthly Meeting, Mooresville, Ind. Died Ninth month 8th, 1899, aged 15 months.

NEWBY.—Thomas Newby, died at his home, in Kansas City, Mo., Tenth month 16th, 1899, aged 70 years.

PINKHAM.—Died, in Dorchester, Mass., on the 30th of Tenth month last, John H., son of Charles G. and Austress G. Pinkham, of Vassalboro, Maine, both deceased. He was a member of Vassalboro Monthly Meeting. Aged 46 years.

PRICE.—Died, suddenly, at the home of his son, John R. Price, in Cherokee, Kansas, Williamson Price, aged 98 years, 7 months. He was a member of Fairview Monthly Meeting of Friends, Missouri. He was an ardent believer in Friends' principles and doctrines, and had been for a number of years a great student of early Friends' writings and church history.

PURINGTON.—Ann Purington, wife of Windsor G. Purington, died at her home, in East Farnham, P. Q., Canada, Tenth month 27th, 1899, aged 60 years. Deceased became a member of Farnham Monthly Meeting of Friends by request.

ROCKWOOD.—Died, Eighth month 19th, 1899, at his home in Worcester, Mass., Calvin R. Rockwood, in the 80th year of his age. He was a member of Uxbridge Monthly Meeting, having joined Friends about forty years ago by conviction, and was for about twelve years an elder. From the time of his joining the Society till his death he continued a firm believer in the principles of Friends.

RUSSELL.—Died, at her home in Philadelphia, Ninth month 10th, 1899, Marion Edith, eldest daughter of Henry C. and the late Jane Richardson Russell, aged 34 years.

STANLEY.—Micajah Stanley died at the residence of his son-in-law, Israel Jenkins, near Beloit, Ohio, Ninth month 3d, 1899, aged 89 years. He was an Elder and lifetime member of East Goshen Meeting of Friends, much loved and esteemed by all who knew him, upright in life and conversation—a real father in Israel.

STAPLES.—Phoebe Branson, beloved wife of Samuel M. Staples, fell asleep in Jesus at Barclay, Kansas, Eleventh month 3d, 1899, in her 74th year. She was born in Belmont County, Ohio, Third month 30th, 1826.

STEESE.—At her home, in Carthage, Ind., on the morning of the 10th of Eleventh month, of cerebral hemorrhage, Grace E. Steese, daughter of Benjamin W. and Emily Hoag Steese (the latter deceased). Of strong Christian character, faith and courage, and active for years in all departments of church work, her life has been a blessing to many.

TEAS.—Anna Teas, daughter of Joseph and Sarah Teas, peacefully fell asleep in the arms of Jesus, Twelfth month 12th, 1899, aged 19 years and 22 days. She was a member of Shawnee Monthly Meeting of Friends, Oklahoma Territory. She was very patient during her illness and said she was prepared to die.

TURNER.—Ora Ellen, wife of Samuel E. Turner, fell asleep in Jesus Twelfth month 4th, 1899, aged 33 years, 3 months and 7 days. She was a member of Union Monthly Meeting, Howard County, Ind., and an active member of the Lynn Christian Endeavor Society.

WILLIAMS.—James M. Williams, son of Hermon D. and R. Jennie Williams, of Whittier, California, fell asleep in Jesus, Tenth month 20th, 1899, aged 26 years. In life he rendered glad and earnest service to the Lord he loved, and enjoyed unclouded assurance of acceptance with his Saviour.

WOOD.—Adelaide Hallock Wood, wife of Charles H. Wood, and daughter of the late Geo. Hallock, of Milton, N. Y., passed away, at her home, in Farmington, N. Y., on the 26th ult., on the fifty-third anniversary of her birthday. As a minister of the Gospel, a member of the Household of Faith, and a leader in the Bible school, she was in high esteem.

WOOTON.—Sarah H. Wooton, daughter of John and Phebe Hixon, and wife of Andrew Wooton, died in Washington County, Kansas, Eleventh month 14th, 1899, aged 72 years. She was a lifelong Friend, and spent more than half her life building up new meetings in Kansas.

EMPIRE OF THE SOUTH.

Its Past, Present and Future.

What is unquestionably the most comprehensive and beautiful volume ever issued upon the South, has just been published by the Southern Railway. Its title, "The Empire of the South," conveys an impression of its general character, but nothing short of a thorough reading demonstrates how carefully the author, Mr. Frank Presbrey, has gone into every interest of this section, commercial, industrial and educational. The book is a superbly illustrated octavo volume of nearly two hundred pages, and not only is the South and all of her vast interests treated in a general way, but each State is separately given full representation. The author had the co-operation of the officials of the Southern Railway in its preparation, and evidently the greatest pains have been taken to make a presentation which is thorough, correct, and at the same time exceedingly interesting. From advance sheets we quote the opening chapter, which appears in the volume under the heading, "The South—Yesterday, To-day and To-morrow."

"The advance of the Empire of the South has been one of the grandest and most noteworthy movements in the industrial and commercial history of the world. It has annulled the force of the adage, 'Westward the course of empire takes its way,' and has destroyed for all time the theory of political economists that emigration follows isothermal lines."

"Considered in general, the development of the South in all avenues of human activity has been coincident and parallel to the growth of the country at large. When, however, this great region is considered by itself, or in connection with individual sections of the United States, a basis of comparison is presented which brings out with startling clearness and in incontrovertible figures the majesty and rapidity of its unparalleled progress."

"Taken as a whole, the States included in this area form an empire of a half million square miles. It is four times greater than England, Ireland and Scotland, and more than seven times larger than the combined area of the New England States. Within its borders could be placed sixty-four States the size of Massachusetts, and five hundred the size of Rhode Island. It has so generous a supply of natural and material wealth, that, if the balance of the world should be swept out of existence, it could prosper and support itself through the ages to come. Raw materials exist or are successfully grown in every part of the South in such prodigal abundance that transportation from mine and field to factory is a minor item. It has a system of intercommunication and connection with the outside world by water and rail which limits the boundaries of its trade and commerce only as civilization is limited. It has a genial climate and prolific soil, and in all avenues, industrial, commercial, agricultural and intellectual, offers its own citizens, and those who may in the future become such,

MR. VANDERBILT'S PUNCTUALITY.

Punctuality was almost a hobby with Mr. Vanderbilt. He was prompt himself in keeping appointments, and he had little patience with men who were careless about their engagements.

A young man of high social station solicited Mr. Vanderbilt's aid in getting a very desirable clerical position in a railroad office a few years ago. Mr. Vanderbilt liked the young man, and, believing him to be capable of filling the place, told him he thought he could help him. "Be here to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock, and I will go with you to the president of that road and say a good word for you," said Mr. Vanderbilt.

The young man promised to be on hand at the time specified, but he failed in punctuality, and presented himself in the anteroom of Mr. Vanderbilt's office at twenty minutes after 10 o'clock. He was told that Mr. Vanderbilt had gone to attend a meeting. A few days afterward he managed to obtain an interview with Mr. Vanderbilt, and when asked very kindly why he did not keep his appointment, said, with a tinge of annoyance, "Why, Mr. Vanderbilt, I was here at twenty minutes past ten."

"But the appointment was at 10 o'clock," said Mr. Vanderbilt.

"Oh, I know that; but I did not think fifteen or twenty minutes would make any difference."

"Indeed," said Mr. Vanderbilt, sternly, "you will find that punctuality in the keeping of appointments does make a great deal of difference. In this instance your lack of punctuality has deprived you of the place you desired, for the appointment was made on the very day upon which you were to have met me. Furthermore, let me tell you, young man, that you have no right to assume that twenty minutes of my time was of so little value that I could afford to wait for you. Why, sir, I managed to keep two other appointments of importance within that time."—"Times."

WHAT A TWO-CENT STAMP WILL DO.

It may not be out of place to give an illustration of the vast distances a letter may travel on the strength of a two-cent postage stamp. Suppose one of the girl readers of "The Companion" in Key West, Florida, has a brother in the Klondike region who has risked all to dig fortune from mother earth, and writes to tell him the news from home. She drops the letter in the post-office at Key West, and it starts on its long journey.

It does not, of necessity, travel in a straight line to its destination, but must follow the twistings and turnings of the railroads, which have complete charge of it until the northwest corner of the State of Washington is reached. When it arrives at Seattle it has passed through fourteen States, and yet, so far as time is concerned, but one-fourth of the journey has been accomplished.

It now takes a sea voyage from Seattle to Juneau, Alaska, and from the latter place is carried, as I have already described, to Circle City. It may be taken from there by friendly hands farther into the Klondike country, and finally delivered to the anxious brother, who has been eagerly awaiting the arrival of the next party from the nearest town in which a post-office is conducted, in the hope that some one would bring him a letter.

This letter has now traveled in the neighborhood of seven thousand miles,—by railroad, steamboat, stage, horseback, and, perhaps, dog-sled,—and has been on the road for nearly forty days, without a moment's rest!

No profit, in money, accrues to the government for delivering that letter; indeed, each letter sent into the Klondike costs the government for transportation many times the amount of postage charged; but in such cases, should we reckon the profit only in dollars and cents?

Should we not consider also the happiness and satisfaction afforded this brother as he sits by his fire, perhaps homesick and lonely, but now with a loving smile illuminating his face, as he reads and reads again every word his thoughtful sister has written about home, mother and father, and perhaps of some one else whom he holds dear? When, finally, he places his treasure under his pillow and seeks rest, he is happier than for many a day; and Uncle Sam, who has contributed so largely to that happiness, does not regret the small pecuniary loss he has sustained.—Ex-Postmaster-General James A. Gary in "The Youth's Companion."

The peasantry of the Scottish Highlands still preserve the old arts of hand-spinning and hand-weaving with spindle, distaff and loom, producing cloths which are famous for their durability and warmth. An interesting article on the various processes has been written for "The Youth's Companion" by Her Grace the Duchess of Sutherland.

THE SALOON-KEEPER'S SIDE.

And yet there was something to be said for the saloon-keeper, says Jacob A. Riis, in the December "Atlantic." He gave the man the refuge from his tenement which he needed. I say needed, purposely. There has been a good deal of talk lately about the saloon as a social necessity. About all there is to that is that the saloon is there, and the necessity too. Man is a social animal, whether he lives in a tenement or in a palace. But the palace has resources; the tenement has not. It is a good place to get away from at all times. The saloon is cheery and bright, and never far away. The man craving human companionship finds it there. He finds, too, in the saloon-keeper one who understands his wants much better than the reformer who talks civil service in the meetings. "Civil service" to him and his kind means yet a contrivance for keeping them out of a job. The saloon-keeper knows the boss, if he is not himself the boss or his lieutenant, and can steer him to the man who will spend all day at the City Hall, if need be, to get a job for a friend, and all night pulling wires to keep him in, if trouble is brewing. Mr. Beecher used to say, when pleading for bright hymn tunes, that he didn't want the devil to have the monopoly of all the good music in the world. The saloon has had the monopoly up to date of all the cheer in the tenements. If its owner has made it pan out to his own advantage and the boss's, we at least have no just cause of complaint. We have let him have the field all to himself.

A GRECIAN LEGEND.

There is a legend that, upon one occasion in the latter days of Greece, when all practical faith in the gods had died out of the minds of educated people, a prize was offered to the sculptors of Greece for the best statue of a certain god; and down in the countryside, somewhere by a marble quarry, there lived a country lad who still believed in that god, and for love of him desired to make the statue.

He chose a block of marble and hewed away manfully. He had before his mind a beautiful ideal of the grace and majesty and power of that god; but when he had wrought his best he made a very crude statue indeed.

And the legend says that this god, seeing his endeavor, when the trial came and the experts were laughing at this crude thing which the boy had shaped with clumsy hand but believing heart, the god himself entered into that pathetic marble failure, and then all the harsh lines flowed into perfect symmetry, the head was lifted proudly, and the marble glowed with all the nameless grace of life.

This legend out of ancient Greece faintly shadows forth the actual fact for you and me to-day, that God the Son is within us. He entered when we believed. He is now asking from us yieldingness to Himself.—C. I. Scofield.

"General Butler was at one time a member of a commission to examine young applicants for admission to the bar," says an exchange; "and before him came a youth who failed miserably on every branch of the law in which he was examined. Finally, Butler turned to the young man, and asked: 'What would you like to be examined in? You have failed in everything we have suggested.' The reply came, 'Try me on the statutes: I'm up in them.' Butler shook his head, solemnly. 'My young friend,' he said, 'I'm afraid you won't do. You may be ever so familiar with the statutes; but what is to prevent a foolish legislature from repealing all you know?'"

MOTHER'S RAINY DAY.

Sometimes there's a rainy day; an' then
We lay off a spell, we men.
Pa talks politics and reads the papers,
An' we boys putter round an' cut up capers,
An' whittle, even down to little brother.
But dunno as I can recollect a rainy day for mother.

Seems if she worked harder then than any other day,
Trying to keep things straight and put away,
Stirrin' up the fire so it won't seem dreary, Cookin' something extra then, makin'
things more cheery;
Pickin' up pa's slippers, or something or another—
I don't believe there ever was a rainy day
for mother.

But then she don't complain. Just keeps workin' on.
Sometimes she has a pleasant word, sometimes a bit of song,
An' lots of times I fancy she has a tired look,
An' I'd feel lots better if she'd rest or read a book.
An' then I wipe the dishes, or do something or another,
An' wish with all my heart there was a rainy day for mother.

SUPERB SOUTHERN SERVICE.

Tourists from the East afforded a special opportunity by a new arrangement of the Southern Railway.

The people of this city, who are in the way used to things of quite a marvelous nature, are just beginning to realize that a railroad trip to Florida and Cuba is not alone an easy matter, but one which may be accomplished with luxury and dispatch.
This is owing to the new arrangement of the Southern Railway Company, which permits of through train from "The City of Brotherly Love" to almost any point in the "Land of Flowers."

Philadelphians who desire to make a trip to the tropics, which is most desirable at this season of the year, find in the new arrangement of the Southern Railway a most pleasing feature. Leaving Washington, the superb Southern trains go direct over their own lines to Savannah, Ga., and from that famed city of the South directly over the Plant System to Jacksonville and Tampa, the latter correctly named "The Magic City of the Gulf." From Tampa, Havana and other places of Cuba may easily be reached via the Plant Line Steamers.

A more delightful trip at this season of the year than that from Philadelphia to points in Florida, either to the east or west coast, could scarcely be imagined. From the National Capital the Southern Railway passes through many of the most famous battlefields recorded in American history.

The richest portion of the South is seen.
Its most picturesque features are viewed.
Its centers of industry and prosperity are traversed and finally the most beautiful section of the nation is reached. Think of it! You can go from Philadelphia to Florida and be compelled to spend but one night upon the road. This arrangement is certainly a marvelous one in railway history, and the number of northern tourists who are already taking advantage of the splendid chance to visit Florida and Cuba is surprisingly large.

The Southern Railway has also excellent

DREAMING OR DOING.

Failures in life are due oftener to lack of determination than to lack of illumination. We have new light, but we do not walk by it. We have an idea, but we do not work at it, restlessly or tirelessly, till it is a fact. The air is full of ghosts wailing for bodies. Our hearts are haunted with good intentions and bright ideas never carried out. Our diaries are wanting in periods, full of unfinished sentences. Better one idea carried out, walking on the ground and working in the world, with real hands and feet, than a dozen beautiful fancies,—than a hundred beautiful dreams. Challenge the next fine idea or inspiration that comes to you. Examine it, take it in hand, give it embodiment, or the strength of your will and the craft of your life will vanish into thin air.—“Sunday School Times.”

ANSWERING A CHILD'S QUESTIONS.

Asking questions is one of the chief occupations of an active, earnest, progressive child. He would not be a proper child, or a hopeful one, if he did not ask questions. Answering questions, or guiding a child in his finding answers to his questions, is a prominent mission of a true parent. The parent who does not recognize, and seek to do, this duty, is not a true and proper parent. Of course, it takes time and care and patience to be faithful in this line—or in any other. Yet no parent can be loving and true toward a child, or toward God, who loves children more than does any parent, without taking an interest in a child's questions, and being ever ready to make tender efforts for their answering.—“Sunday School Times.”

Practical Christianity

By RUFUS M. JONES, Litt. D.

This is a collection of short, practical articles on important religious subjects. It deals with questions which every thinking man must meet in a practical way, and it contains a positive message for the times. In these fifty-three essays many of the most important phases of the spiritual life receive consideration, and the notes of hope and victory, and faith in the overcoming life, are everywhere manifest. It is a book which should appeal to all classes of Christians. The book also contains a suggestive chapter on “The Message of Quakerism.”

Special Fountain Pen

PREMIUM OFFER!

The POST FOUNTAIN PEN is the Only SELF-FILLING, SELF-CLEANING Pen in the world.

It is the Greatest Invention in Fountain Pen construction of the Age.
No Filler Required—A Fine Gold Pen that will last a Lifetime—No Inky Fingers.

The manufacturers of the "Post" Pen have a wonderful list of testimonials. Prominent men in Politics, Finance, Law, Religious Movements, Literary Men and Business Men—men who have never before allowed their names to be published in connection with a testimonial—have given unqualified and public praise to the POST FOUNTAIN PEN.

THE "Post" is declared to be the fountain pen nearest to perfection of anything yet found. It has been unstintedly praised by Josiah Strong, Lew Wallace, Ira D. Sankey, Commander Booth Tucker, Bishop Vincent, Colonel Herrick, the late ex-Governor Flower, Consul Booth Tucker, and very many others.

GENERAL LEW WALLACE says:

"The fountain pen "Post" was received, and I have taken the liberty of trying it thoroughly. I have tried every pen of the kind on the market, and now unhesitatingly give the preference to the "Post." It not only feeds itself with less care, but has the immeasurable advantage of re-supply without inking the fingers, I do all my work with it."

Lew. Wallace.

COLONEL HERRICK, in Cleveland, O., is best known as the president of the foremost savings bank in that city; throughout the States, however, he is equally well known as one of America's most successful business men. We are pleased to note his comparison of the Post pen to other makes. He writes:

"Until recently the great conveniences offered in a good fountain pen were unknown to me, having been deterred from the purchase and use of a pen by the rather disastrous experience of others with leaking and dry pens. Recently, however, I became possessed of a Post pen, which I am pleased to commend as in every way a perfect pen, simple in its mechanism, durable, perfectly tight, and responding readily. It has fully answered my expectations, and is a source of much comfort to me."

Amos Herrick
